Is Cancer Contagious?

Jackie Kennedy's rapid death from "Non-Hodgkin's lymphoma" cancer in May 1994 shocked and saddened the world. Now officials of the American Cancer Society are hinting that some lymphomas may be caused by viruses. If so, are these viruses contagious? And how can we protect ourselves from them? What do we really know about the origin and cause of cancer? Are these new cancer viruses related to cancer-causing retroviruses like HIV (the AIDS virus)?

As a rich woman, Mrs. Kennedy-Onassis received the best treatment for her disease at one of the most prestigious cancer hospitals in New York. Yet, within 5 months of the discovery of her lymphoma, she was dead. Even in my most paranoid state I cannot conceive of any sinister aspect of her demise. However, it is a well kept secret in medical circles that the required treatment for cancer, particularly chemotherapy and radiation, can sometimes hasten the death of cancer patients. For example, one of my patients had "routine" treatment for Hodgkin's disease, which consisted of extensive surgery followed by radiation to the chest and abdomen. After he recovered from this, he was given an intensive course of chemotherapy. Within a year of his diagnosis, and less than four months after chemotherapy, he died. At autopsy, there was no evidence of cancer. His death was caused by fatal damage to his heart and lungs by the radiation treatment he received. How much of Jackie's death can be attributed to the treatment she underwent for cancer will never be known.

Cantwell, Jr.

Cancer Mysteries

Cancer kills more American women than any other disease. Cancer of the breast is the #1 killer in Anglo, Black, Latina, Chinese and Japanese-American women. No one knows the reason for this. Jackie's cancer, Non-Hodgkin's lymphoma, is among the top 10 most common forms of cancer in all races, except for Blacks. Again, no one knows why.

Why do Chinese-American men have a high risk of liver cancer, when the disease is decidedly uncommon in other Americans? Why is the prostate cancer rate among Blacks in Los Angeles county 60% higher than in Anglos; and 80% higher than Asians? Why do Anglo men have a bladder cancer rate twice that of other groups? No one has an adequate explanation for these cancer occurrences.

Lymphoma Cancer

There are three major types of lymphoma cancer: Hodgkin's disease, Non-Hodgkin's lymphoma, and a type of lymphoma which affects the skin called mycosis fungoides. All lymphoma patients may experience similar symptoms. The exact type of lymphoma requires diagnosis by a pathologist, and depends on the microscopic appearance of the cancerous cells and tissue. The "classification" of lymphoma types is in constant flux and reappraisal. Strangely, the cancer cells of Jackie's Non-Hodgkin's lymphoma were reported as a new type called "Ki-1."

Hodgkin's disease is one of the very few forms of cancer that has long been considered as having a possible infectious origin. For decades, epidemiologists have recognized "cluster cases" of Hodgkin's. The actual number of cases was so high in certain communities that it was highly unlikely to be due to statistical chance. Even so, definite proof of a Hodgkin's disease agent has not been forthcoming. Some scientists are now suspecting a possible cancer-causing retrovirus.

The Cancer Microbe

All this would not surprise my mentor, the late Virginia Livingston MD, who for 40 years claimed that various bacterial and viral forms of "the cancer microbe" were responsible for the infectiousness and possible contagiousity of cancer. Long before the discovery of the AIDS virus, she stressed care in the sexual arena, as well as the importance of hygiene, diet and supplements in the treatment of cancer. Her use of vaccines made from the patient's own cancer bacteria ultimately resulted in the condemnation of her cancer research and her treatment methods for cancer. Robert Gallo MD, the co-discoverer of the AIDS virus, denounced her scientific work as insanity.

Over the past century physicians have refused to believe that an infectious agent could cause cancer. In the 1970s, scientists proved that animal cancer viruses were capable of causing cancer, but there was no proof that viruses caused human cancer. Now with the discovery of cancer-causing retroviruses, such as the AIDS virus, doctors are reconsidering the idea. The history of modern medicine seems to prove Cantwell's law that "Most physicians are wrong in their understanding of most diseases, most of the time."

Why is Non-Hodgkin's lymphoma one of the fastest rising cancers in the U.S.? Is the rise related to drug use (legal and illegal), immunosuppression from environmental sources, or radiation effects? No one knows. My own published research into the cause of all three types of lymphoma indicates that "cancer microbes" are the infectious agent. My studies confirm Livingston's research, as well as the cancer microbe research of dozens of other scientists throughout the world who have implicated bacteria in various forms of cancer. This work is documented in my book The Cancer Microbe (1990). Over thirty of my published papers on AIDS, cancer, and other immunologic diseases, are available in medical libraries. And anyone hooked into a computer network can get abstracts of these papers through "Medlars 11," the National Library of Medicine's computer retrieval service.

The startling cancer microbe discoveries are ignored by the cancer establishment. Undoubtedly the recognition of a heretofore unnoticed infectious agent in cancer and AIDS would provoke havoc in medical science. Thus, cancer bacteria remain "in the closet" and the research "politically incorrect."

Death by Cancer

So many people have been done in by cancer at a convenient time in history that conspiracy buffs wonder if you can "give" people cancer. I recall the propitious cancer deaths of Jack Ruby, William Casey, Martha Mitchell, the Shah of Iran, Mae Brussell, and others. (Even O.J. Simpson was tested for lymphoma cancer in a swollen lymph node while imprisoned awaiting trial for murder.) Can you kill people by injecting them with cancer viruses and bacteria? Of course! No one in their right mind would want blood from a dying cancer or AIDS patient. Can you give a person cancer? If cancer in animals can be caused by injecting them with cancer viruses and bacteria, it would certainly be possible to do the same with human beings!

Cancer: One Disease or Many?

The American Cancer Society constantly reminds us that there are many "different" kinds of cancer. This concept is highly effective in raising money for each type of cancer that the ACS promotes. But in reality there is a close relationship between certain forms of cancer, particularly lymphoma and leukemia (cancer of the blood). In the 1970s, virologists discovered that animal retrovirus infection (similar to the AIDS virus) could cause an increase in lymphoma and leukemia in the animals, as well as immunosuppression. In 1983, a year before the official discovery of HIV, Harvard veterinarian Myron Essex found that 25% of gay AIDS patients had viral antibodies to blood from a case of "human T-cell leukemia," caused by a new retrovirus called "human T-cell leukemia virus-1." When Robert Gallo announced his discovery of the AIDS virus in 1984, he believed the virus was related to this new family of leukemia viruses. Thus, he first named the AIDS virus "Human T-cell leukemia virus-3." Later, the virus was renamed HIV: the human immunodeficiency virus.

Famous victim: Why is Non-Hodgkin's lymphoma, which killed Jacqueline Kennedy-Onassis, one of the fastest rising cancers in the U.S.?

When the AIDS virus (HIV) was introduced into the gay community in the late 1970s, the incidence of Kaposi's sarcoma (a previously rare form of cancer), as well as the incidence of Non-Hodgkin's disease, began to skyrocket in HIV-infected gay men. Both types of cancer had previously been associated with immunodepression. For example, in the mid-1970s the normal incidence of Kaposi's sarcoma increased 400 to 500 times in transplant patients who were routinely immunosuppressed with prescribed drugs as part of the procedure. In 1981, the year the AIDS epidemic became official, Bijan Safai and Robert Good, scientists at Memorial Sloan Kettering Cancer Center in New York City, declared a close association between Kaposi's sarcoma, leukemia and lymphoma. They proposed all three cancers be considered "as part of a spectrum of disease affecting the lymphoreticular system."

The American Cancer Society is unlikely to remind its contributors that treatment for one form of cancer can cause the formation of another "different" cancer. For instance, after chemotherapy about three percent of Hodgkin's disease patients go on to develop Non-Hodgkin's lymphoma, or leukemia. Officially, the reason for these "second cancers" is unknown. Surprisingly, most cancer experts assume two different diseases are involved. They theorize that chemotherapeutic drugs depress the immune system, resulting in the development of "new" cancers.

Is Cancer Contagious?

Physicians now understand that sexually transmitted retroviruses, such as HIV, can cause cancer and immunosuppression. Nevertheless, doctors continue to tell patients (unless they are gay) that cancer is neither infectious or contagious. What about the transmissibility of new retroviruses that have been identified in certain human leukemia cases? So far, the cancer establishment is not commenting. Do cancer viruses and the increasing rates of certain forms of cancer, such as Non-Hodgkin's lymphoma, have a relationship to the AIDS epidemic? In the absence of a positive HIV test, I would say no. (Both Jackie Kennedy and O.J. Simpson tested negative for HIV.) In my book, Queer Blood: The Secret AIDS Genocide Plot (1993), I describe the genetic engineering of animal cancer viruses in the early 1970s that, in my opinion, resulted in the creation the AIDS virus. (Are there any PARANOIA readers who actually believe AIDS comes from African green monkeys?)

Man-Made Viruses

Whether one agrees with the idea that AIDS is a man-made epidemic, it is a fact that we now deal with viruses that are "natural" (so-called endogenous viruses); and viruses that are genetically manipulated, man-made, and "unnatural" (exogenous viruses). These laboratory-created viruses are now used as an integral part of the new gene splicing technology. Engineered and altered animal cancer viruses, such as the mouse leukemia virus, have already been used in human genetic experiments. If cancer viruses can be injected into people to make them well, they certainly can be injected into people to make them sick! Can genetically engineered viruses be covertly seeded into select populations for political and genocidal purposes? Was the "introduction" of the AIDS virus into the Black African population, and into the U.S. gay male population, a deliberate attempt to eliminate these groups? Government AIDS experts repeatedly tell us that AIDS began as a Black African disease when an African green monkey "jumped species." The U.S. public was initially told AIDS is a "gay" disease, caused by anal sex and drugs. But who can conceive of a Black heterosexual epidemic in Africa that transformed itself into an exclusively young white gay male epidemic in New York, Los Angeles, and San Francisco?

Recently a physician colleague referred a patient to me with a written diagnosis of "AIDS caused by homosexuality." This indicates how powerful and effective the government's disinformation program has been in convincing the public (and some physicians) that AIDS is a gay disease. Now that 4 million men and women are infected with HIV worldwide, do people really think most were sodomized?

Coping with Cancer

Jacqueline Kennedy-Onassis's death from cancer, despite access to the best treatments and doctors that money could buy, certainly justifies a degree of cancerophobia. Her rapid demise makes us wonder if her treatment killed her quicker than her lymphoma. (Some lymphoma patients live for many years.) But did she have any treatment options? If you had cancer, would you go against the advice and wisdom of a cancer expert? Who would turn down chemotherapy and radiation if they thought it would save their life? How do doctors separate the toxic effects of cancer from the toxic effects of treatment with chemotherapeutic drugs, surgery, radiation and steroids? Will doctors be able to save us if we are diagnosed with cancer? Can we catch cancer-causing viruses from our family, our friends, our lovers? Is this reason for paranoia? You bet it is!*

It is a well kept secret in medical circles that the required treatment for cancer, particularly chemotherapy and radiation, can sometimes hasten the death of cancer patients.

Sinister Shuttle "Science"?

"What possible reason could NASA have for beheading rats with a guillotine in a space craft?" an astute reader of Flashpoint recently wrote and asked. He was referring to the bizarre "scientific experiment" conducted on rats during a recent space shuttle mission.

NASA hailed the beheading of the six rats a scientific triumph. Martin Fettman, America's first veterinarian in space, had the dubious honor of using a miniature guillotine to complete this gory space task.

What possible reason, indeed? Could it be that this strange incident has something to do with Revelation 20:4? There we find the astonishing, last days prophetic vision of John: "I saw the souls of them that were beheaded for the witness of Jesus."

Yes, in the final stages of the New World Order, all those who refuse to worship the beast or his image, or who reject his mark, will be sentenced to death by decapitation.

In a political cartoon printed on the editorial page of newspapers across the nation during the last presidential election campaign, fundamentalist, Bible-believing Christians were depicted as rats dragging the Republican Party (GOP) unwillingly into a meeting hall for drunks. True Christians depicted to the masses as worthless rats running a mission for drunks!

Now comes NASA, a government agency which I have previously exposed as riddled with evil Freemasonry in its highest managerial ranks (see my book Ravaged by the New Age), to give the world a hellish demonstration of how the lives of rats can best be terminated—by cutting off their heads with a guillotine.

In Revelation 13, we discover that the satanic number of the beast is triple 6s—666. Is it a coincidence that exactly 6 rats were chosen by NASA to be sacrificed under the bloody, space guillotine?

Was NASA's grotesque experiment, in reality, a sadistic and arrogant boast of antichrist forces? Was it, in fact, the shadow of things to come? Was the beheading of six mice by guillotine in space some kind of occultic cosmic theater? This may seem to be a far out notion, but NASA's explanation that the guillotine beheading was part of a "scientific" experiment is just as implausible, if not more so.

For Some Eyes Only: Coded Occult Messages

by Scott Corrales

In a recent interview for Fortean Times, veteran paranormal researcher John A. Keel stated his belief that many "supernatural" events were indeed acts of black magic staged for the benefit of a particular group of percipients. This belief could perhaps be carried even further, into the all-too-real world of cryptic, nonsensical messages and designs that fill the pages of certain books (like the infamous Voynich Manuscript) or are handed to dumbfounded contactees by long-haired, space-suited aliens.

The Washington, D.C. City Paper, in the Fall of 1985, featured in its "Personals" column a small ad which read: "O.T.O., A.A.: where are you, brothers and sisters?" Readers of this section of the free paper state that the bulk of the messages in the personals are communications between members of the gay community or crack dealers. The aforementioned ad, however, hailed the attention of anyone able to recognize the initials for the Ordo Templi Orientalis and Argentorum Astrum—occult lodges of the early 20th century, which might perhaps be experiencing a rebirth toward the latter decades of the same century.

On the subject of hidden messages in our cities' newspapers and journals, Jacques Bergier, the prolific French author and scientist, commented: "I've often wondered if certain strange classified ads in the newspapers are in fact messages between superintelligent beings." (1) Bergier, coauthor of The Morning of the Magicians, dedicated a great deal of study to the problem of cryptology as a branch of paranormal research.

If the existence of enigmatic, ciphered messages were confined to the newspapers, it would be possible to dismiss them as merely the pranks of a particular group of people, drug runners, or those soliciting companionship. The riddle posed by occult messages goes far beyond foolscap: into stone carvings on European monasteries, carefully etched metal tablets given to the founders of religions (as was the case with Joseph Smith, founder of the Mormon faith), and the cuneiform-like messages given to the contactees of our UFO age by the denizens of other dimensions or worlds.

What secret societies or order of "superintelligent beings" could be making use of concealed messages to contact each other? We can begin by examining some highly intriguing leads which hint at a much vaster picture.

Foremost among these leads is the ages-old alchemists' quest for the elixir of life and the Philosopher's Stone. It was long held in esoteric circles that both of these had in fact been discovered and that their secret was tightly guarded by the Rosicrucians and another more carefully concealed organization known as the Priory of Sion, which allegedly still exists in our times and has had a distinguished series of "grand masters" which includes some of the foremost names in scientific history (however, neither Newton nor Einstein are named as being part of this society).

Authors Lionel and Patricia Fanthorpe have delved deeply into the subject, producing a book entitled Secrets of Rennes-le-Chateau, a look at a site in France which resonates with the intrigue of esoteric groups ranging from the Merovingian Franks to the Knights Templar. They suggest that the entire physical layout of Rennes-le-Chateau and its neighboring villages compose a single occult design, pointing to a particular location where something of great importance—or a warning to stay away—may be waiting to be discovered. (2)

The Voynich Manuscript, mentioned earlier, constitutes a perfect example of an encoded document that can only be understood by exactly the right person or persons, to the chagrin of cryptologists and those bent on unlocking its secrets. Allegedly, it was originally the property of Roger Bacon, the medieval Franciscan friar, and found its way into the hands of many Renaissance occultists, such as the infamous Dr. John Dee. The Vatican eventually acquired the manuscript, and some of its best minds attempted to crack the illustrated manuscript's coded mysteries. Some eighty years ago, an American antiquarian, Wilfrid Voynich, purchased the bizarre text which now bears his name and circulated it among the most learned minds of the time: some believed that its illustrations depicted the flora of another world; others hinted at charts of the constellations as they appeared thousands—or millions—of years ago. After World War 2, a scholar claimed to have deciphered part of the manuscript and obtained the instructions for a viable contraceptive method. (3) The Voynich Manuscript could well be the factual basis for H.P. Lovecraft's accursed grimoire, the Necronomicon.

In the 1820's, a young farmer in New York state, Joseph Smith, was visited by an angelic being who instructed him to dig up a number of golden tablets buried near his property. He was to translate the tablets, which recounted the history of the tribes that had arrived in America by means of the sea. His translation is known to us as the Book of Mormon.

Many people known to Smith saw the tablets, and two notarized statements describing their size, shape and curious hieroglyphics are known to exist. Who deposited the golden tablets there? What became of them after Smith reinterred them?

The authors of The Secret of Rennes-le-Chateau hint that one of the items whose location could probably be hinted at by the coded symbols are the Emerald Tablets of Hermes Trismegistus, the Egyptian deity Thoth, patron of magic. Possession of said tablets could have aided the medieval alchemists in attaining their goals.

History reminds us, however, that the alchemists were merely proto-scientists, and that their life-extending elixir and the Philosophers' Stone were merely the stuff of dreams. Yet, could some alchemists have stumbled upon the secrets, and made use of them? Could alchemy be alive and well in our times?

Professor Juan Rocha de Azevedo, author of En Los Límites de lo Inexplicable, relates the tale of Eugene Canseliet, who belonged to the circle of adepts surrounding the shadowy figure of the "alchemist" Fulcanelli in the 1920's. At the time, members of the inner circle boasted that their master was on the brink of cracking the Philosopher's Stone. But as decades passed, Canseliet stated that Fulcanelli had long since disappeared—although he claimed to have visited him in Seville, Spain, in the 1950's, and that Fulcanelli had undergone extensive physical changes as a result of having ingested the Elixir of Life. Azevedo states that the nature of these changes was an overall androgynous appearance. (4)

What we know for sure about Fulcanelli is collected in his books Mysteries of the Great Cathedrals and The Philosophers' Dwellings. Apparently, he was conversant in the matter of the secret symbols employed among those "in the know": "In the Middle Ages, the masters whose treatises have survived until our times would decorate their homes with esoteric signs and images." The reader is advised that one such symbol is that of a lion rampant and a dragon biting its own tail. (5)

There is no dearth of "secret societies" to blame for the many coded messages that exist. Everyone from the Illuminati to the Catholic Church has been accused, at one point in time or another, of being a cabal of dark "superminds" ruling the fate of a plodding, unsuspecting mankind. Obviously, any group capable of sustained existence from the depths of antiquity to the present must surely be remarkable, if we consider the ups and downs of human history and the propensity of organizations to come unraveled—unless we make the prodigious leap of faith that would lead us to accept that there could be "immortal" humans, or paranormal beings in human guise that guide the hidden groups throughout the ages.

Consider the case of Apollonius of Tyana, a sorcerer/scholar from the city of Tyana in what is now modern Turkey. If that tradition is to be credited, we are faced with a man who was capable of teleportation, was most certainly immortal or extremely long-lived, and who was a master of Pythagoric doctrine and geometry. Apollonius traveled to Tibet led by his guide, Damis, arriving at a land of Greek-speaking people with an "unreal," mutable landscape (another dimension?). The dwellers of this hidden kingdom had mastered levitation, robotics and the artificial illumination. The errant philosopher learned that this land existed "in the world, but beyond it." Returning to the Mediterranean area, then controlled by Rome, Apollonius was accused of treason against Emperor Domitian. Brought before Caesar, Apollonius declared: "You may imprison my body, but never my soul, and I will add, not my body, either!" In a burst of light, witnessed by Roman courtiers and a stunned Domitian, the captive vanished into thin air.

In esoteric circles, it is believed to this day that Apollonius is the same entity known as the Count of Sainte Germain, who was active in the 1700's and was renown for his great wealth and insight. Sainte Germain and Apollonius had certain powers in common: bilocation (the ability to be in two places at the same time—probably the ability most coveted by 20th century man!), the power of healing the sick and the ability to decipher "the language of birds." Fulcanelli could be merely another guise of this everlasting being.

There is no dearth of "secret societies" to blame for the many coded messages that exist. Everyone from the Illuminati to the Catholic Church has been accused ... of being a cabal of dark "superminds" ruling the fate of a plodding, unsuspecting mankind.

Even if we do not give credence to such an idea, it could perhaps answer the question as to who or whom is the source for the cryptic messages and codes hidden in works of art and architecture. Furthermore, the years in which St. Germain operated were also those in which a number of scientific developments—some which were never followed through—became apparent. He could have been the catalyst for the Enlightenment, as others have suggested.

Roger Boscovitch, in 1756, circulated a tract on time travel, anti-gravity and bilocation, matters which are still unattainable to modern science. James Price, who was reputedly able to change mercury into gold in less than 15 minutes, lived roughly around the same time. Before he vanished from the 18th century, St. Germain allegedly informed a guest at a dinner party that he had to leave, in order to bring about more inventions that would be useful to humanity in the future: the steam engine and electricity. It would be this "secret society" of inventors and experimenters, then, that would leave behind symbols and references that could only be understood by a peer or equal. In Secrets of Rennes-le-Chateau, Fanthorpe suggests that these symbols are still in use today, and make sense, naturally, only to the target reader or viewer. Fanthorpe considers the highly elaborate drawing of the Gates of Moria in J.R.R. Tolkien's Fellowship of the Ring to be one such device. (6)

The reader might well feel cheated at this point—we are no closer to solving the mystery of cryptic messages than we were at the outset. Yet we are deluged by such messages, perhaps even more so in our television age, in which these mysterious communications could be broadcast subliminally to the intended receptors, or overtly, through strange or unusual advertisements.

Spanish researcher Salvador Freixedo received a personal communication from the sources behind the controversial UMMO documents—concerning a group of extraterrestrials allegedly on Earth, originating from the star Wolf 424, now thought to be a mere disinformation exercise—and was told to signal his interest in continuing communication with them by placing a classified ad in his local newspaper. (7) Freixedo went ahead and placed the ad, which contained the "Ummite" word for "man" (OEMII). To avoid hassles from the paper's editor, Freixedo claimed that the unusual word was a brand of radionics machine!

If we bear in mind that such messages do exist, perhaps we will find ourselves giving everything, from odd TV commercials to the graffiti on our streets, a second thought. •

AMERICA'S SECRET DESTINY

a two hour lecture by
RALPH EPPERSON

It's true! America has a "secret destiny" that has been kept from the American people for over 200 years! UNTIL NOW!

Ralph Epperson, for 30 years an historian and lecturer, author of THE UNSEEN HAND and THE NEW WORLD ORDER, has discovered that it has been kept secret because IT IS COMPLETELY HORRIBLE! He was the first to expose the NEW WORLD ORDER, in 1985, and he is the first to make public the real history of America's beginning. More information than you will want to know!

Can you imagine an ALL POWERFUL GROUP that knows no national boundaries, is ABOVE THE LAWS OF ALL COUNTRIES, one that controls every aspect of politics, religion, commerce and industry, banking, insurance, mining, THE DRUG TRADE, the petroleum industry, a group ANSWERABLE TO NO ONE but its members?

That there IS SUCH A BODY, called "THE COMMITTEE OF 300," is graphically told in this book. When most people attempt to address our problems, they speak or write about "THEY"; this book tells precisely who "THEY" are, and what "THEY" have planned for our future, how "THEY" have been at war with the American nation for 46 years, a war which we are on the brink of losing, what methods "THEY" use and exactly how "THEY" have brainwashed us.

Once you have read the appalling truths contained in this book, understanding past and present political, economic, social and religious events will no longer be a problem. This powerful account of the forces ranged against the United States, and indeed the entire free world, cannot be ignored.

Many of the missing pieces reveal what connection Aristotle Onassis had with the Kennedys. In addition, new insights are revealed to answer the following: How and why did billionaire defense contractor Howard Hughes meet his fate? Why was President John F. Kennedy and his brother Robert murdered? Was the Watergate scandal merely an extension of these events? What is the impact of early 20th century maritime history? What was the "October Surprise" really about? Project Seek offers new insights on the meaning of these and other pivotal events in American History.

UFOs over Orgonon

by Jerome Eden

Jerome Eden was a pioneer Orgone Energy and UFO researcher since 1951, actively studying the works of Dr. Wilhelm Reich for almost 40 years. He was born in New York City in 1925, received his B.A. from New York University and his M.A. from Columbia University Teachers College. He served as a hospital corpsman in the Navy in both World War II and the Korean War. He was a dedicated and responsible cloudbuster operator, conducting successful cloudbusting operations in Alaska and Idaho. His last years were spent teaching the science of Orgonomy and writing books on Orgone Energy as it applies to education, science and UFOs. He died after a long illness on January 18, 1989, in Sandpoint, Idaho.

Jerome Eden's widow, Desiree, who continued distribution of Jerome's work through Eden Press in Northern Idaho, wrote this introduction on September 1, 1993. She died on March 20, 1994. Jerome Eden's books, Planet in Trouble: UFO Assault on Earth, Scavengers From Space and Orgone Energy: Answer to Atomic Suicide are currently not available. The following article by Jerome Eden first appeared in Official UFO Magazine in October, 1975 and is the first of a three part series.

Reprinted with permission.

On October 11, 1954, General Harold E. Watson, head of the U.S. Air Force Air Technical Intelligence Command (ATIC), Wright-Patterson Air Force Base, Dayton, Ohio, received an unusual and urgent telephone call from a research laboratory near Rangeley, Maine. This long-distance call was made by William Moise, a research associate of Dr. Wilhelm Reich, director of the Orgone Institute.

Moise informed General Watson that Dr. Reich had actually disabled two UFOs over the Rangeley, Maine, area the night before—October 10, 1954. Air Force scientists and intelligence personnel were familiar with Reich's research and his discovery of a mass-free, pre-atomic cosmic energy that fills all space. Reich had reported and documented two previous UFO sightings over his Rangeley laboratory on January 28th of that same year. He had continually kept various government agencies advised of his research work, including the CIA, the FBI, the President's office and the Department of Health, Education and Welfare.

General Watson was extremely interested in this latest development in Reich's research. He asked Moise how Reich knew the UFOs had been disabled. Moise replied that "the manner of their behavior and movement clearly indicated they were disabled." Moise added that the matter was so crucial that Dr. Reich desired to report this event to the General at a personal meeting where the facts could be presented in full detail. And since Reich was preparing to travel to the Arizona desert with a research expedition, Moise requested a personal appointment to see General Watson on October 15th.

General Watson told Moise he could not see him on that day because a CIA group from Washington was arriving. However, he said that he could see Moise on Thursday, October 14, and that should Moise arrive late, "if necessary we could continue the conference after supper, until late in the evening."

Now, before we pursue any further events, let us examine the background and highlights in the career of this scientific UFO researcher, Dr. Wilhelm Reich, which led to the crucial meeting between Reich's associate, William Moise, and top-level personnel of the U.S. Air Force Air Technical Intelligence Command. Back in 1954, General Harold E. Watson had a reputation for being extremely skeptical with regard to UFO sightings and especially those who reported them. As reported by Major Donald E. Keyhoe, when General Watson was still a colonel he made a public pronouncement that stung and shocked every serious and responsible UFO researcher in the United States. The then Colonel Watson had stated, "At the end of nearly every report tracked down stands a crackpot, a religious fanatic, a publicity hound or a malicious practical joker." Having made such a strong public statement while still a colonel, General Watson must have had very good reasons for wanting to discuss the disabling of UFOs. To find those reasons, we must examine some of the research conducted by Dr. Wilhelm Reich.

Reich was born on March 24, 1897 in imperial Austria. He received his medical degree from the University of Vienna in 1922. For six years he was first clinical assistant at Freud's Psychoanalytic Polyclinic. Even in those early years, Reich was known for his enormous vitality and scientific integrity. While seeking the biological energy behind neurotic manifestations, Reich discovered a specific biological energy which he named "orgone," after the words "organismic" and "orgastic." Research between 1934 and 1939 led Reich to an understanding of this totally different form of energy and to a comprehension of how it functions in the human organism in sickness and in health.

In August 1939, Reich transferred his scientific laboratory to the United States and eventually became an American citizen. From 1939 to 1941, he was Associate Professor of Medical Psychology at the New School for Social Research in New York City. In December 1940, Reich wrote a letter to Professor Albert Einstein, who was then working at the Institute for Advanced Study in Princeton, N.J. It may be recalled that at this time, Einstein, as well as other scientists and physicists, was attempting to interest President Roosevelt in atomic energy research and the development of the atomic bomb. Reich, in this brief but important letter to Einstein, expressed his hope that he might interest Einstein in the discovery of a life-positive, pre-atomic primordial energy that filled all space! Reich had been able to scientifically objectify this orgone energy thermally, electroscopically, microscopically, visually and in other ways.

Would Professor Einstein be willing to listen to Reich's presentation of his findings? Einstein invited Reich to his home, where the two scientists met on January 13, 1941 for nearly five hours of discussion. It was at this initial meeting that Reich presented Einstein with an "orgonoscope," an instrument invented by Reich which magnifies the atmospheric orgone energy and makes it more readily visible. Einstein was amazed.

Later, Einstein's orgone energy accumulator by Reich to concentrate atmospheric orgone make it available for medical research. Einstein's amazement increased. If this discovery is valid, he told Reich, "it will be a bomb in physics!" Einstein's choice of words here is rather significant, because of his own interest in developing the atom bomb.

Unfortunately, Einstein's interest in the crucial discovery of a mass-free, pre-atomic atmospheric energy was thwarted by political interests at variance with American progress. Einstein continued to pursue the development of atomic energy, while Reich and a handful of dedicated co-workers concentrated on further elaborations of the Life Energy of man and his universe—orgone energy. The scientific community of Earth had been given a choice between the development of the destructive power of the atom or the life-positive power of

at a second meeting with Einstein, Reich set up one of his orgone energy accumulators in his basement. The orgone accumulator was invented to concentrate the energy and make it available for scientific and medical research. Einstein's amazement increased. If this discovery is valid, he told Reich, "it will be a bomb in physics!" Einstein's choice of words here is rather significant, because of his own interest in developing the atom bomb.

orgone energy. Unfortunately, the majority of the scientific community chose to pursue the atom and ignore orgone energy—the Life Energy of man and his planet.

For the next 10 years, quietly and without fanfare, Reich continued his research in orgonomy, the science of the Life Energy, on his 280-acre laboratory-estate (called "Orgonon") near Rangeley, Maine. On January 5, 1951, Reich performed a series of experiments which were to prove crucial to both atomic energy and UFO research. According to the report of Dr. Elsworth F. Baker, who witnessed these events, Reich put 1 milligram of radium, still in its lead container, into a 20-fold orgone energy accumulator in a metal-lined room for five hours. This procedure was repeated daily for one week. The results were described in Reich's publication, The Oranur Experiment: First Report (1947-1951). In Dr. Baker's own words:

"The count on the Geiger counter went up alarmingly and finally jammed. The building and atmosphere around it glowed at night. One physician went into shock and nearly lost her life. The mice which were used in this experiment died. A peculiar, sickening acrid odor pervaded the atmosphere, while clouds hung over the area constantly. Reich fell ill and hovered between life and death for weeks. The whole area became uninhabitable."

Classical science can give no explanation for this extremely deadly occurrence. One milligram of radium within its lead container would, under normal circumstances, harm no one. Yet this same one milligram of radium when placed within a high concentration of orgone energy, produced a reaction of profoundly dangerous proportions. Reich termed this interaction between the orgone and nuclear energy "oranur." Orgone energy exists everywhere. All space, both within our planet and in our universe, is filled with this mass-free, primordial orgone energy. Thus, atomic-energy production and use anywhere on Earth (underground, in nuclear plants, or in the atmosphere) can cause—and is causing—an "oranur reaction." Such oranur reactions reach out into deepest space. Reich believed it is this reaction which has brought down the spacemen and their UFOs to investigate our planet's irresponsible use of nuclear energy.

Copies of this experiment were sent to almost every major U.S. governmental agency. After the Oranur Experiment, Reich buried the radioactive material and all but forgot about it. In succeeding years, however, around the laboratory site, with no nuclear material present, Reich and co-workers noticed an increase of background radiation on the G-M counter around the vernal equinox. Also, UFOs were noticed over the Rangeley region. At first Reich paid little attention to the outer-space visitors, and it wasn't until 1953 that Reich read any books on the UFO enigma. He made a series of time-stop photographs of the night sky. The tracks of certain "stars" in the heavens indicated by their variance from other stars that they were not stars at all.

The repeated appearance of UFOs over Orgonon, coupled with the high radiation counts on the G-M counter, plus the appearance of certain dirty, blackish "clouds" that hovered over the region, forced Reich to focus his attention on these events. The passage of UFOs in the area, or the appearance of UFOs in the night sky was regularly accompanied by these noxious, black "clouds" which Reich came to call "DOR" clouds—that is, clouds containing Deadly Orgone energy. Reich discovered that DOR is actually "exhausted" orgone energy. Just as a gasoline engine converts gasoline, via combustion, into deadly carbon monoxide, so, too, does the "destruction" of orgone energy result in its deadly variant, DOR!

When these dirty, noxious DOR clouds appeared over Orgonon, the sparkle left the atmosphere. People would begin to feel weak, without energy. DOR, Reich noted, lacks oxygen and water. It is also highly radioactive. In its thirst for oxygen and water, DOR will attack animal, vegetable or mineral. It will dry out the moisture from soil and atmosphere. It will consume the oxygen from rooms. As it filters down from the atmosphere, DOR will cause symptoms in human beings that are closely akin to flu: chronic weakness, wandering aches and pains, stomach upset, diarrhea, nausea to the point of vomiting, need for oxygen, etc.

To rid the skies of these noxious DOR clouds over Orgonon, Reich invented what he termed a "Cloudbuster" or "DOR-Buster" which is described in my book, Planet in Trouble. Briefly, the Cloudbuster consists of a number of hollow metal pipes grounded by metal cables into water, preferably flowing water. Orgone energy is strongly attracted to water, and so is DOR. When Reich pointed his Cloudbuster at the noxious DOR clouds coming in from the west, an astounding result occurred. The DOR clouds began to shrink and dissolve and a fresh breeze would start up immediately. As soon as the area had been cleaned of DOR clouds, people felt better, more alive, and the distressing symptoms of "DOR-sickness" disappeared as well.

The invention of the Reich Cloudbuster led to an entirely new field of weather-control which Reich called Cosmic Orgone Engineering. A responsible orgone engineer who is thoroughly versed in the study of orgone-energy functions can, with a Cloudbuster, change wind direction, bring about clouds and rainfall in a previously cloud-free sky, lift fog, and even stop rain, if desired. In 1953, Reich produced rain for a group of blueberry farmers in Maine whose crops were being destroyed because of severe drought. The farmers agreed to pay Reich if he could bring sufficient rain in a specified time, and the farmers paid Reich when his Cosmic Orgone Engineering Operation proved successful. A local Maine newspaper carried the story. Moreover, Reich sent reports of his weather-control activities to the Maine Commissioner of Agriculture, the Governor of Maine, and the U.S. Weather Bureau. For the most part, however, his efforts brought nothing but official silence.

Now we come to another amazing occurrence which was to lead, eventually, to a meeting between William Moise and top-level Air Force Intelligence personnel at Wright-Patterson Air Force Base in Dayton, Ohio. The night is May 12, 1954. Let us reconstruct this unprecedented event in Reich's own words, as recorded on the Court records:

"I made actual contact by way of the cloudbuster with luminous objects in the sky on May 12, 1954, between 9:40 and 10:45 p.m. During this hour men on earth saw for the first time in the history of man and his science two "Stars" to the west fade out several times when cosmic energy was drawn from them. The shock of this experience was great enough not to repeat such action until October 10, 1954. The reason for the hesitation was obviously the risk to precipitate an interplanetary war by such experimentation. Easy contact was made on that fateful day with what obviously turned out to be a heretofore unknown type of UFO. I had hesitated for weeks to turn my cloudbuster pipes toward a 'star,' as if I had known that some of the blinking lights hanging in the sky were not planets or fixed stars."

It should be noted that when Reich succeeded in actually disabling the UFO by withdrawing its propulsive power (the cosmic orgone energy), the DOR emergency situation over his area improved considerably! There was no mistaking the connection between UFOs, the presence of DOR, and drought development. Reich did not repeat the stunning Cloudbuster "Star" experiment again until the night of October 10, 1954. It was at this time that he succeeded again, in the presence of several highly reliable witnesses, to disable two UFOs. These spaceships were hovering silently in the night sky, and each time Reich pointed his Cloudbuster at them, they faded, their lights dimmed appreciably, they wobbled as if in an attempt to get away, and then dimmed out altogether!

It was after this second disabling of UFOs on October 10, 1954, that William Moise, one of Reich's close associates and a skilled Cloudbuster operator, made the long-distance telephone call to General Harold E. Watson of ATIC.

As he told General Watson over the phone, Dr. Reich was preparing a research expedition into the Southwest in order to test his theory that DOR infestation of our planet Earth was causing world-wide drought and desert development. It was Reich's idea to travel with two mechanized Cloudbuster units mounted on trucks, and set up a research camp in the Arizona desert.

On the way west, Moise sent a telegram to General Watson confirming his arrival at Dayton Air Force Base on October 14, 1954. When Moise arrived, he phoned General Watson, and his meeting with the General was confirmed for 4 p.m. When he arrived for his conference Moise was met by Dr. W.H. Byers, a ATIC physicist, who told him he was familiar with the work being done by the Orgone Institute. Dr. Byers escorted Moise to the conference room where Air Force Captain D.M. Hill and Mr. Harry Haberer, described as a "civilian working with the Air Force in regard to the history of UFOs," were also present. Moise was told that General Watson was "unavailable."

Moise refused to discuss matters with anyone other than General Watson. Angered over the General's non-appearance, Moise left the conference room, stating that, if necessary, he could stay on for two more days to meet with the General. (All the events at this crucial meeting are documented in Reich's book, Contact With Space.) The following morning, October 15, 1954, Captain Hill telephoned Moise at the latter's Dayton motel, apologized for Watson's absence and asked if the "Orgone Institute would report to Colonel Wertenbaker, the ATIC Deputy Commander." Moise agreed, and the meeting took place between Colonel Wertenbaker, Captain Hill, Harry Haberer and Moise at 9:30 a.m. on October 15, 1954.

At this conference, Moise presented Reich's crucial information regarding the disabling of UFOs, speaking for nearly an hour while most of these gentlemen took notes. This was followed by Reich's request (conveyed through Moise) that Reich's space equations be "sealed and secured" by the USAF for safekeeping in the event something happened to Reich. Colonel Wertenbaker readily agreed to this request. As Moise's report of these events (given in Contact With Space) indicates, he "showed the Colonel the equations" and asked "if such a copy as I had with me could be deposited, sealed with the Air Force to take care of such a situation. Colonel Wertenbaker answered immediately that this could be done and that the Air Force would respect the confidence entrusted to it."

Reich and his research expedition proceeded to the Arizona desert and began their first DOR-removal work on November 2, 1954. Reich's theory, it will be recalled, was that DOR is responsible for desert development. By removing DOR from the desert atmosphere, the natural functions of cosmic orgone energy would be "revived," so to speak, the atmospheric moisture would increase and rainfall could then occur. This is precisely what happened! By December 1954, grass was actually growing more than a foot high in previously desert soil! However, the UFOs, evidently aware of Reich's desert-reversal operations, became increasingly active. Each time Reich withdrew the DOR from the desert atmosphere, UFOs would pour it back in again. In order to maintain a DOR-free environment, Dr. Reich was forced to turn his cloudbuster machines upon the hovering, harassing UFOs!

Reich's conclusions are grim and very shocking. He believed that UFOs are definitely contributing to world-wide drought and desert development, and that unless mankind reversed the DOR-assault upon our planet, Earth will soon become another desert wasteland like the moon! Instead of being honored and rewarded for his valiant efforts in UFO research, Reich returned from Arizona to face false charges brought against him through the FDA by certain political and commercial hoodlums in the United States and abroad.

As we all know by now from our "energy crisis," energy runs the world. And here was a magnificent scientist who discovered a freely available source of cosmic energy! Reich had actually hooked up electric motors that ran on this limitless source of free cosmic power. He was willing, freely and openly, to give this discovery to the United States Government. An injunction was obtained through the Food and Drug Administration which stated in effect that Reich was a fraud and a quack, that there is no such thing as "cosmic orgone energy," and that Reich claimed he could cure, with this energy, all kinds of diseases from cancer to the common cold. All of these FDA allegations are totally false.

Nevertheless, Reich was imprisoned in Lewisburg Penitentiary for failure to comply with the FDA injunction. All of his books, research publications and scientific literature were banned and burned, and Reich was found dead in his cell on November 3, 1957, just one week before he was to be released. Reich's disabling of UFOs is on the record. His "greening" of the Arizona desert is also on the record. Today, there is renewed interest, worldwide, in Wilhelm Reich's UFO research—the only genuinely scientific UFO research that offers Earthmen the slightest hope of combating the increasing DOR-assault upon our planet. •

Cellular Phone-Brain Tumor Link?

• Last December, headlines assured us that cellular telephones were safe and did not cause brain tumors. Industry spokespeople trumpeted the news and decried public "hysteria" over the issue. Now, the study on which the headlines were based has been declared invalid by the scientist who performed it, and the FDA is now advising people to use hand-held cellular phones only "when necessary." The study had been done by Om Ghandi, chairman of the Department of Electrical Engineering of the University of Utah, and was declared invalid by Ghandi as well as other scientists who reviewed it. "This is a scientific process, and yes, you find some errors," admitted George Carlo, chairman of the seemingly impartial Scientific Advisory Group on Cellular Telephone Research, an outfit actually established by the industry. Questions about the phones' safety were prompted by a lawsuit filed last year by David Reynard of Madeira Beach, Fla., alleging that his wife Susan's death was caused by a brain tumor triggered by radiation from her cellular phone. (Ft. Lauderdale Sun-Sentinel)

Baseball Conspiracy

• Gerald A. Carroll, and adjunct assistant professor at the University of Iowa's School of Journalism, has charged that the suspension of the major league baseball season is a conspiracy hatched by the Council on Foreign Relations (CFR). Noting that Richard Ravich, chief negotiator for the major league owners, is a CFR member, Carroll believes that the baseball shutdown is a CFR attempt to undermine a traditional American sport and that the CFR power brokers want to break the back of a small group of affluent athletes who could be an obstacle to the CFR's drive for one-world government. Critics of Carroll's theory, likely proposed in jest, should note that Baseball Hall of Famer Steve Carlton came under heavy fire last year for saying publicly that a small clique of international bankers rules the world. (The Spotlight, 30 weeks for $19.94, 1-800-522-6292)

International Cult Murders

• While "cult experts" initially labeled the autumn deaths of fifty members of the Order of the Solar Temple in Switzerland and Canada the result of a "suicide pact," it's now clear that it was a case of mass murder. Salvan, Switzerland police chief Bernard Geiger has stated, "It would be more proper to talk of a collective murder than a suicide..." and police said that most of the shots that killed the victims were not fired by the three rifles found near the dead.

Like Lee Harvey Oswald, cult founder Luc Jouret had a confusing mix of left- and right-wing political associations in his past. From 1965 to 1975, Jouret was an active member of a Belgian Communist youth league, but prior to establishing his cult, he had belonged to the New Order of the Temple, a cult founded by a French right-wing extremist in 1968. He has also been connected to Chinese and Peruvian Marxist groups. Meanwhile, Jouret associate Joseph di Mambro is said to have been connected to Nazis during World War II.

Another odd aspect of the case is the fact that the interior of the cult Temple contained images (an Egyptian sphinx, a rose and cross, a grail) that suggest links to a secretive and ancient religious sect known as the Cathars. The Cathars, similar in philosophy to the Knights Templar, were severely persecuted and massacred by the Catholic Church. The Cathars and/or the Knights Templar are thought by some to have possessed powerful secrets relating to the life of Christ and perhaps the Holy Grail itself.

Perhaps most significant in this case is the fact that both Jouret and di Mambro had been under investigation by the RCMP in Canada for arms running and money laundering. While a recent CNN report did mention that the cult may have been involved with international money laundering, this angle has not been widely reported or investigated. (Reuters, CNN, Holy Blood, Holy Grail)

The "Medical CIA"

• A semi-secret wing of the Centers for Disease Control (CDC) was founded in 1951, and continues its shadowy work today. Among epidemiologists, it is often half-jokingly referred to as the "medical CIA." The Epidemic Intelligence Service (EIS) recruits recent medical or biological graduates, who undergo several weeks of intensive training at the CDC's Atlanta headquarters. Graduates are then assigned to various state or local health departments, where they effectively act as the "eyes and ears" of the CDC. When their two-year "tour of duty" ends, EIS officers must remain prepared to return to active duty at any time. For example, during a war or "national emergency," the EIS would operate under any emergency powers granted the CDC, potentially including conducting quarantines and forced mass immunizations. The nearly 2,000 EIS alumni have gone on to high positions within the medical establishment, including the Surgeon General's office and World Health Organization. In these capacities, they may continue to serve as the CDC's surveillance arm, as well as seemingly "independent" advocates for CDC policies. Members do not tend to discuss their affiliation, however, and public availability of the EIS membership directory has been suppressed since 1993. (Bryan J. Ellison, from a forthcoming book, Inventing Aids)

Just a Coincidence?

• On June 13 1993, soon after announcing that Pennsylvania Governor Robert P. Casey would require a lifesaving heart and liver transplant, doctors reported that they had located donor organs of the right tissue, blood type, and size for the governor. Within hours, Casey was on the operating table, and transplant surgeon Dr. Thomas Starzl was sewing in the heart and liver of a recent black murder victim, 34-year old William Michael Lucas. Because the average wait for a heart alone is one year, Dr. John Young, one of Casey's other surgeons, has admitted, "We were concerned about people's perception that this smacks of favoritism or conspiracy." (In contrast to Casey, a young Pennsylvania girl recently died after 10 years on an organ waiting list.) A man involved with the Lucas beating, Christopher Claud Gary, had been working for the Pennsylvania Attorney General's Westmoreland County Drug Task Force as an informant. The charges against the alleged ringleader of the group of men who beat Lucas, Ron Wethers, were dropped when a crucial witness disappeared and refused to testify. ## More on Phoenix

In your story on the death of River Phoenix [PARANOIA Issue 6] you confess to confusion regarding "whether River Phoenix had been contacted by, or was going to be contacted by, the Argentine prosecutors..." My point in my July Hustler article ["Family Ties"], that Phoenix was a prospective witness for the prosecution, was not in reference to the Argentine sexual abuse case. By the time Phoenix died, investigations of the (Family of Love) sect had spread throughout South America ... In fact, Clarin reported on September 12, 1993, "All over Latin America, Satanic and esoteric rites have been the subject of complaints concerning the sect." All of this was filtered out of the American press, which falsely reported that no medical evidence of abuse was found and simply dropped the story after an initial flurry of coverage. As a result, the investigation that directly concerned River Phoenix—of the San Cristobal, Venezuela branch of the Family, which raised him—would have, if at all comprehensive, included the involvement of his parents. Had Phoenix lived, his account of sex with adults at the age of four would surely have been of interest to Venezuelan authorities.

Ritual Abuse Conspiracies

As a minor player in the world of conspiracies, I did my part to advance the paranoiac world view. I now renounce my former activities. It is a futile game; if we are not happy with our lives, we can always blame the saucer people or the Illuminati. If we are unhappy with the decisions people make, we can blame mind control ... It may seem like harmless fun to pile spurious crimes on top of the very real ones committed by, say, an E.

Howard Hunt. But you do a shameful thing when you jump on the ritual abuse bandwagon, and repeat charges leveled against innocent people [PARANOIA Issue 5]; you lose sight of the fact that it could easily be you or me accused in these cases. As people who would appear to revel in being part of the fringe, please tell me why you would align yourself with state power, as exercised by prosecutors and police. OK, you printed a disclaimer ... Fair enough. Since you are "committed to critical thought," I urge you to secure permission to reprint the enclosed article on the McMartin Tunnels, and publish it by way of rebuttal. Matt L. via e-mail

[Matt: Our article did point out that the McMartin defendants were found not guilty, but your point is well taken. Regarding the article you enclosed by Debbie Nathan, it is in fact a well-argued case against the McMartin accusers. However, I have not at this time been able to secure Ms. Nathan's reprint permission. Debbie, did you get my e-mail?—AJ]

Setting Texe Straight

Just read my first PARANOIA and was very favorably impressed! But I really have to respond to Texe Marris' attack on San Francisco's Glide Memorial Church [PARANOIA Issue 4]. I don't know where Mr. Marris comes from, but I'd be willing to bet there isn't much diversity in his region. By singling out the hookers' convention, which was actually a women's empowerment event and hosted very few, if any, hookers, Mr. Marris attempts to make some kind of Memorial Church—Jezebel cult equation. What about the hundreds of other charitable and fundraising events that Glide and its pastor, Cecil Williams, have put on over the years? And the congregation is "strongly pro-gay." Oh, my word! ... Over the years, the Church's dining room has fed breakfast, lunch and dinner to thousands of low-income Tenderloin residents ... The Church and its congregation is also mostly Black and has a proud history of championing progressive causes. To print a rave such as Mr. Marris' does a great disservice to the integrity of your periodical. Please get rid of crap like this in future issues.

Michael R. San Francisco, CA

[Mike: I'm pleased that you have balanced out Mr. Marris' admittedly one-sided view of the Church. However, I believe that the "integrity," if any, of PARANOIA, would actually be damaged if we were to use some sort of "politically correct" or "progressive" filter to block certain viewpoints. For what it's worth, I'm sure Mr. Marris doesn't agree with everything we publish, either.—AJ]

Underground Developments

This concerns the theft of my material without attribution by Serge Monast, the French-Canadian "Investigative Plagiarist." ... After reading his press release advertising his new book (about UN Concentration Camps), I have determined that 80% to 90% of the material on the release comes from my book! ... The man is nothing if not bold. And here's the kicker—in some cases he has copied my stuff word-for-word and still gotten the spelling and syntax jumbled. A rare talent.

Also, thank you for the review of my book Underground Bases and Tunnels [PARANOIA Issue 6]. However, I would like to point out that the review erroneously states that I have concluded that the military has built an extensive, secret underground tunnel system. In fact, I have not reached such a conclusion. I explicitly say in my book that I have no hard proof in that regard. What I do present are actual plans for such a system. But plans are not the same as real tunnels ... Where underground bases and installations are concerned, the matter is different: there are many of them and they are very real.

In the late 1960s, Black Sabbath was one of the first rock groups to break through the counter-cultural banner of psychedelic day-glo colors, peace, love and drugs, ripping through the tattered fabric of the summer of love's idyllic symbolism. Their dark fuzz tones and repetitive monster melodies paved the way for the occult-influenced rock of the 70s and 80s. This sudden shift in perspective appeared to some to be the antithesis of everything The Summer of Love had stood for.

In Abbie Hoffman's autobiography Soon To Be A Major Motion Picture, he describes a Sabbath concert he attended in the early seventies, and the dark vibes that blasted from the amplifiers. Everything that had gone wrong at the end of the sixties, says Hoffman, was embodied in the negativity and fuzz tones booming from Geezer Butler and Tony Iommi's respective axes. Apparently, the Rolling Stones' infamous 1969 Altamont concert—where the Devil first supposedly reared his malevolent horned head at a major rock event—had been a harbinger of things to come; just the tip of Satan's iceberg.

The Swingin' 6-6-60s

But did this devilish influence begin before 1969, and before the first heavy metal devil bands appeared on the scene, crooning their blasphemous ballads in homage to the Dark Prince? If you take a deeper look into the psychedelic drug culture of the surrealistic sixties, you'll soon see the hoofs of Lucifer hobbling about from the very beginnings of the Haight Street scene.

Anton LaVey, the High Priest and founder of the San Francisco-based Church of Satan, became popular shortly before the advent of the psychedelic explosion. His Church attracted a subculture of occult "weirdos," as well as "beautiful people" who had tuned in, turned on and dropped out, dedicating their lives to better living through chemistry.

One young beauty he attracted was Sexy Sadie/Susan Atkins, who appears in the book Satan Wants You by Arthur Lyons, surrounding LaVey as part of a bevy of seductive and scantily clad women. In this High Priest's "Witches' Sabbath" topless show, Atkins played the fitting role of a vampire. Three years later, she would confess to licking blood from the knife that she used to kill actress Sharon Tate, when her theatrical vampire fantasy became reality during the Manson murders. Another photo from this period shows Atkins in her predestined role as vampire, wearing a long, open black robe revealing her nude and shapely body, as mock blood drips from her lips. Later, of course, she fell into the loving arms of Father Manson and the rest is dark history.

Charles Manson—who was deep into Satan as well as Christ, Hitler, Scientology and the Beatles—showed up on the Haight shortly after his release from prison in the mid-sixties. Manson immediately perceived the unlimited potential there; all the hopped-up impressionable minds waiting to be manipulated, including the minds of nubile teenage babes with whom he could fornicate, and who would—in good time and on his behalf—commit grisly knife murders for their loving Messiah Chuck.

by Adam Gorightly, with Al Hiddell

Bobby Beausoleil—who became one of Manson's most beloved hippie henchman—was lead singer in a pseudo psychedelic rock band named Orkustra around the time of Manson's arrival on the Haight, and also starred in occultist Kenneth Anger's experimental film Invocation of My Demon Brother (1969). That film also featured Anton LaVey, and a brief appearance by Rolling Stones frontman Mick Jagger, who also composed the soundtrack. Around that time, Jagger also co-wrote the Stones' classic opus "Sympathy for the Devil."

After working with filmmaker Anger, Bobby Beausoleil sank to greater depths, burrowing down into the deep dark pit of Helter Skelter accompanied by Sexy Sadie, Tex Watson, Patricia Krenwinkel, et al. Watson is perhaps the most guilty and dangerous of them all, including Manson. Today, Watson has found Christ as his personal savior and has a mail-order ministry which he operates from prison, apparently making serious bucks and attracting true believers.

Satan's Top 40?

Aleister Crowley—the renowned Satanist and drug/sex experimenter—greatly influenced late sixties rock music, as well as the contemporary Heavy Metal Devil-Worshippers. Crowley died and presumably went to Hell in 1947, but his evil spirit made a comeback in the sixties with the resurgence of interest in the occult. In fact, he appears among the myriad of famous faces adorning the cover of the Beatles' Sgt. Pepper's Lonely Heart's Club Band. While that is not indisputable evidence that the four Liverpudlian Lads were also part of the Satanic Underground, the Beatles were in fact one of the first rock group to explore backward masking, and the use of subliminal and "coded" messages in their songs. Hence, the "Paul is Dead" hoax. And the Beatle song that Manson said inspired him, the title of which his followers wrote in blood on Sharon Tate's wall. (Hint: it wasn't "I Want to Hold Your Hand.")

In the early 80s, Christian broadcasters Paul and Jan Crouch produced one of the first television segments on backward masking. In this fascinating broadcast, they played several rock songs backwards, by artists including Led Zeppelin, ELO, and Black Oak Arkansas. On one tune from the Black Oak Live album could be heard the words "Natas, Natas"—Satan spelled backwards—raspily repeated over and over in a devilish growl. Similarly, another researcher has demonstrated that Aeoromith's "Walk this Way" sounds a lot like "Hail Satan" when played backwards. Some believe that such subliminal messages are poisoning the minds of susceptible listeners, who receive these sacrilegious missives surreptitiously and go on to perform evil deeds. Such an evil deed shook the small town of Northport, New York in the Summer of 1984. The incident involved three teenage boys, all from "good" homes: Ricky Kasso (photo at left), Jimmy Troiano and Gary Lauwers.

The Rolling Stones' infamous 1969 Altamont concert was a harbinger of things to come; just the tip of Satan's iceberg.

On the night of June 16, the three got together in a local park to do some mescaline, smoke some pot, and listen to a tape of Black Sabbath's Ozzy Osbourne, who most assuredly "ruled." Within a few hours, Lauwers was dead, stabbed at least thirty times in what police called a "sacrificial" and Satanic "cult killing." Kasso, it was said, had repeatedly ordered Lauwers to "Say you love Satan" as he stabbed him, while Lauwers could only cry for his mother.

The police and media labeled it a "Satanic" killing based on testimony given at the trial, as well as the presence near the scene of graffiti proclaiming such sentiments as "666" and "Satan Rules." Although there were clearly Satanic elements in the killing, as well as in the heavy metal music the boys often listened to, there is no evidence whatsoever that the music "compelled" the action, or that the killing was part of organized Satanic "cult" activity. In fact, the killing appears to have had more to do with Kasso's drugged-out state, and his anger at Lauwers for not having paid him for an order of mescaline. However, Kasso's jail-house suicide, and the subsequent acquittal of Jimmy Troiano, raised the possibility that there was more to the story. (Perhaps the most horrifying aspect of the killing was reported by David St. Clair in his book Say You Love Satan. He quotes a Northport real estate saleswoman's lament that "the worst thing" about the incident was that it "lowered property values.")

Mellow Slaves

Recently, a commentator on a Christian television show was waxing elephants on the subject of "Satanism in Rock." Not surprisingly, Aleister Crowley was the first person he mentioned before launching into a devil-bashing discourse on the world of rock n' roll, where everyone from screamin' demons like Judas Priest to mellow country/rock groups like the Eagles [See PARANOIA Issue 1, "Mellow Slaves to Satan?"-ed.] are part and parcel of the backward-masking demonic conspiracy, beguiling our misguided youth and leading them into the wicked world of Drugs, Sex, Satan...and "The Simpsons."

To illustrate his point, the commentator showed a clip from "The Simpsons" in which Homer and God have a talk about why Homer hasn't been to Church lately. I found it hysterical, though the faithful in the flock were not laughing. In fact they all looked quite distressed. Maybe there was something going around; some sinister strain of intestinal flu, perhaps?

Heads Will Roll

In the 70s, Creem magazine was the rag to read if you wanted to keep up with the Heavy Metal scene. The hugely successful group Led Zeppelin was a frequent presence on its slick yet gaudy pages, with stories of Zeppelin guitarist Jimmy Page's famous haunted castle, once owned by none other than Mr. Aleister Crowley. (Page is said to have reported various creepy apparitions, including a disembodied head rolling down the stairway.) It seems Page was heavily involved in the supernatural, owning at one time an occult bookstore. Another item of interest concerning Page was that he composed music, not used, for the aforementioned Kenneth Anger's film, Lucifer Rising (1970).

Jimi Hendrix

Rumor has it that the woes which befell Led Zep toward the end of the seventies were due to a curse upon the band caused by Jimmy Page's endeavor into the Dark Side. Given the death of Robert Plant's son, in addition to the drinking- and drug-related demise of drummer John Bonham, some believe that the Zeppelinites were paying their just and due karma for years of reckless and deviant behavior; specifically that of Jimmy Page, who was said to be a notorious drug abuser who spent his idle hours poking pubescent jailbait babes usually 14 years or younger.

Standing at the Crossroads

Other performers besides Led Zeppelin may have been victims of Satanic curses, signing pacts that came due too early in their music careers. Ironically, the guy who probably started it all was a man who inspired Jimmy Page: blues guitarist Robert Johnson. As legend has it, some time around the Great Depression, the struggling Johnson made a pact with the Devil while "standing at the crossroads." The deal provided him with awesome guitar-playing powers and a lasting influence on such rockers as Page and Eric Clapton. The catch was, as you might have predicted, an early death courtesy of a jealous husband.

Recently, guitarist Clapton experienced his share of tragedy when his toddler son apparently crawled out an open window and fell to his death. Also, Black Sabbath founder Ozzy Osbourne's fiery guitarist, Randy Rhodes—considered one of the greatest heavy metal players—died in a tragic plane crash at the height of success, while Ozzie and other band members watched horrified from the ground.

And recall Jim Morrison, rock's premier delver into the darker side of human nature. According to Jerry Hopkins and Danny Sugarman's Morrison bio No One Here Gets Out Alive, one night the Lizard King and a Scandinavian acquaintance named Ingrid Thompson snorted up a bunch of coke and shared a cup of ritual blood. They then fornicated wildly, howling like banshees. After this wicked night of blood-drenched sex, Morrison woke up to discover the woman gone, and himself and the sheets of his bed dry-caked with blood. This scared the shit out of even wildman Jim, who rushed out of the den of wickedness only to die in Paris a few years later under mysterious circumstances.

A few months previously, Morrison had married witch Patricia Kennedy—while at the same time betrothed to common-law wife Pamela—in a secret Wiccan ritual. However, it is important to note that witches (or Wiccans) like Kennely are not Satanists. Rather, they worship the ancient forces of nature: the Great Mother and her counterpart, the Horned God.

And then there's Jimi Hendrix. In an interview conducted after his death, one of his many concubines stated that Hendrix had been prone to fits and seizures where—driven to the point of madness—he'd pull his hair and go nuts, thinking himself possessed by evil entities. Was Hendrix himself the "Voodoo Chile"? Was Jimi tapped into strange spirits that in the end took his life at the pinnacle of a brilliant career?

The song has remained the same for many other rock legends, from Buddy Holly to Kurt Cobain. After all the gifts of Heaven and Earth were bestowed to them at young ages, in a snap of a finger they were taken away. Does this not sound like a pact with el Diablo?

Satanic Underground

In The Ultimate Evil, Maury Terry connects Charles Manson with various rock stars from the sixties who in turn were connected to a sinister Satanic Underground of drugs, sex, ritual murder and—ostensibly—The Process Church, a Satanic religious organization formed in England during the psychedelic sixties. Terry attributes this Satanic Underground to not only the Tate/La Bianca murders, but also Son of Sam killings of the 1970s. Terry's thesis is that while David Berkowitz did in fact commit some of the Son of Sam murders, others were committed by this Satanic Underground, namely a character named Manson 2, who is still at large. (In 1993, Berkowitz himself claimed the involvement of unnamed others, part of a Satanic cult, in The Son of Sam murders.)

According to Terry, Manson 2 played a pivotal part in the drug-related murder of Roy Radin, producer of the film The Cotton Club. Actor Demond Wilson, of the 70s sitcom Sanford and Son, appears to have also been connected with Radin and the cocaine fast lane, apparently working as a bodyguard for the producer. Soon after Radin's messy demise, Mr. Wilson found God and picked up the Bible, becoming a Baptist Minister. Like Mansonoid Tex Watson, David "Son of Sam" Berkowitz is yet another recent Christian convert. Do you see an odd pattern here, or is it all just coincidence?

Two more rock stars alleged to have been connected to the celebrity Satanic Underground were Mama Cass and John Phillips of the Mamas

In The Ultimate Evil, Maury Terry connects Charles Manson with various rock stars from the sixties who in turn were connected to a sinister Satanic Under- ground of drugs, sex, and ritual murder and Papas. After achieving phenomenal success with that group, John Phillips seemed to be the crown prince of the Feel Good generation; a mover and shaker who knew all the right people and made all the right moves, financially and socially. Legendary were the parties at his posh pad in the Hollywood Hills, where a Who's Who of Hip were known frequently to gather, getting high and cutting deals, plotting the new revolution of drugs, left-wing politics and sexual liberation. Mr. Terry suggests it was at some of these parties where the paths of Roman Polanski, Sharon Tate and the rest of the star-struck Cielo Drive crowd initially crossed with the Manson Clan. Fitting the familiar pattern, misfortune soon fell upon

Sharon Tate, Mama Cass and John Phillips: Tate, of course, was brutally killed by the Mansonites; Cass soon died, allegedly done in by a sandwich on which she choked; and John Phillips' life was nearly destroyed by his growing drug addiction. (Today, Phillips is clean and drug-free, due in part, it is said, to the encouragement of friend Mick Jagger.)

Chuck is Chic

Surprisingly, Manson had other celebrity connections. Prior to the Tate/La Bianca murders and Chuck's ignominious fall from grace, Beach Boy Dennis Wilson is said to have been a Manson supporter. Manson and his "family" did in fact live in Dennis' house for a few months, supported by Wilson. Soon, Manson was recording some songs at Dennis' brother (and fellow Beach Boy) Brian Wilson's home studio. However, Dennis soon became frightened by Manson and fled the house, whose lease was about to run out anyway. Manson and friends remained, but were soon evicted by the landlord (not an enviable task.) Nevertheless, a song by Manson, with slightly altered lyrics, appears on the Beach Boys album 20/20. The original song was prophetically titled "Cease to Exist," but it is called "Never Learn Not to Love" on the album.

Because he dared to alter Manson's "sacred" lyrics, and also failed to get him a recording contract with producer Terry Melcher, Manson apparently grew to hate Dennis Wilson. Some believe that the Tate/La Bianca murders were actually a twisted warning to Terry Melcher, who was living at the murder scene just weeks before the killings occurred. In addition, a few days after the murders, Manson showed up at Dennis Wilson's house. Dennis was on tour, but Manson left a bullet and told the person answering the door to tell Wilson that "this is for you."

Tragically, Dennis Wilson died an early and (according to the late conspiracy researcher Mae Brussell) mysterious drowning death in 1983. Was this the result of a Manson vendetta or curse? Did Dennis Wilson possess knowledge that would have turned Satan's Mighty Underground upside down if revealed? Or did he die, as friends report, in what was nothing more sinister than a drunken swimming accident?

Jim Morrison

Before her own untimely death, Brussell was researching the military's involvement with the occult, Satanism and child abductions vis-à-vis Satanist and military intelligence officer Michael Aquino, and others. Did she discover certain secrets that led to her undoing? (Some believe the cancer which killed Mae was created in a lab and injected, a scenario which Lee Harvey Oswald's killer Jack Ruby believed applied to his own fatal cancer. But that's another story.) In the 90s, singer Axl Rose has become Charles Manson's latest celebrity supporter. Rose has been criticized for recording a Manson song, wearing and selling Manson T-shirts at Guns and Roses concerts, and sharing the profits with Charlie. Why is he doing this? Perhaps Rose is simply trying to attract publicity through his shocking and controversial actions. If so, he wouldn't be the first rock star to do so.

However, this might instead be a sign that a new generation of rockers has begun to play the same old dangerous game, courting forces more sinister than they or their fans can imagine. •

Water under the bridge

Dean: ...if they get those bank records between the start of July of 1969 through June of 1971 ... there comes Chappaquiddick with a vengeance ...

Nixon: (unintelligible)

Dean: ...if they get to it ... that is going to come out and this whole thing can turn around on that. If Kennedy knew what a bear trap he was walking into...
Watergate tape, 3/13/73

Introduction by Joan D'Arc

The Chappaquiddick "accident" occurred just thirteen months after the assassination of Robert Kennedy. It was rumored that Teddy had been drinking heavily during those months, traumatized by the assassinations of both of his brothers. A perfect hit on the third Kennedy brother's political career, therefore, did not necessitate killing him. In fact, a third shooting would have been poorly advised, as it would have alerted a sleeping citizenry to the "Conspiracy" in charge of America's Seat of Power.

Using Teddy's weakness for alcohol against him was the perfect way to scandalize him out of the presidential race of 1972. No better trap could have been set than an engineered automobile accident after a party which had involved "booze, blondes, and the beach." But You the People never had the chance to hear the whole story. Many questions were never properly answered, many contradictions not addressed. Now, after 25 years of distortion and cover-up, the Chappaquiddick accident that killed Mary Jo Kopechne, Bobby Kennedy's secretary, is just water under the bridge.

But for the sake of the facts, and the life of an innocent girl, we believe the evidence warrants a serious reappraisal of the most infamous motor vehicle accident in history, for which Ted Kennedy had no choice but to take the blame. Should we just let sleeping corpses lie? Even though Kennedy is still alive, this CIA-orchestrated ambush left him politically dead. Forced to lie about being behind the wheel, Kennedy dropped out of the presidential campaign nine months later. And that walking corpse has been lie-ing for 25 years.

Give us a hint Teddy. A wink and a nod. With CIA guns at your back, how deliberate were your mysterious hints like "when I fully realized what happened" and "whether the girl might still be alive somewhere out of the immediate area..."? Do you know who really killed Mary Jo Kopechne?

A lecture by Robert B. Cutler to the Providence (RI) Conspiracy League, October 29, 1994. Edited by Joan D'Arc.

On the matter of Chappaquiddick, it's a very easy thing to resolve if you first make up your mind that, of course, Teddy was running after the girls, that he left the party to go to the beach for sex, that he was "plastered" and that the party was in effect nothing more than a drunken brawl. This is the story that the media tried so hard to make it out as. It's simple to say what happened, and to believe what Teddy himself said happened, but if you read the transcript of the inquest and you're thinking to yourself "what the hell is going on here" and you go after the FACTS of the case, you've got a different story.

Here's a test: sitting in your car on dry land, try getting out from under the steering wheel and climbing out your car window. Now flip your car completely upside-down and try to climb out of that window with water rushing in, on a pitch-dark moonless night. Try to think about that and I think you'll see that it really is impossible. We're down to Sherlock Holmes: "When you have eliminated the impossible, whatever remains, no matter how improbable, must be the truth." There is no question in my mind that it is impossible for Ted Kennedy to climb out that window. Therefore Teddy was not in the car and it was an engineered accident.

How do you get Teddy out of that car? How do you get him walking over a mile back to the cottage after the accident, walking past two or three lighted houses, a fire house? It's unimaginable for a sensible human being not to ask for help when help is available! How about the ridiculous swim over to Hellsport after such a traumatic experience? How can you believe him sitting for a half an hour the next morning with friends and not mentioning one word about an accident, the death of a friend, but instead chatting about the weather, about the race, about what a good time they had yesterday? It's completely ridiculous!

If you read the inquest from the point of view not that Teddy was after the girls, but rather as to how to engineer an accident, a political assassination that gets Kennedy out of campaign '72, then all of the facts begin to fall into place.

I've been going after the facts on all these political assassinations. In fact, I spent eleven years alone on the JFK assassination before I could confidently say that I thought I had the firing sequence, the shots and the wounds, all matched up, and even then I had to revise it! So, let's go after the facts of the Chappaquiddick accident which prove that it was engineered.

What really happened at Chappaquiddick?

Engineering an Accident

First you've got the "skidmarks" on the bridge, which are not skidmarks at all because they go absolutely straight! Skidmarks would indicate that brakes were used, so there would be a swerve to them. There are two parallel marks on the rubrail going in the same direction, no swerving. Now anyone coming toward that bridge would have turned the wheel at least a little bit; it's not much, only about a 23 degree turn is all that's necessary to avoid going off into the "drink." But there are no turn marks. The marks are absolutely straight, so you have to wonder how those marks were made, because they were not made by somebody going 22 miles per hour, as Ted Kennedy claims.

The registry report shows the measurements of the marks, where the car was from starting point and where it ended up and all that, all done very scientifically, but nobody paid a damn bit of attention to it! The final report of the Registry of Motor Vehicles in Massachusetts says exactly what Teddy says: that he was traveling at 22 miles per hour!

The judge at inquest never paid attention to those things. Remember, there was no trial for the death of Mary Jo Kopechne. It was just a hearing to determine the facts of the case and whether there was negligence, and that's what the judge found, of course: that Ted Kennedy was negligent in leaving the scene, and failing to report a motor vehicle accident.

Also curious is the fact that the car literally "flew" 36 feet into the air. In other words, when you measure from the point of takeoff to where the engine landed, you've got 36 feet. Now an engine of that weight (Oldsmobile) does not travel 36 feet at 22 mph! John Farrar, a fireman and scuba diver, the one who dove down and found Mary Jo, had an engineer friend estimate how fast the car had to be going in order for the weight of the car to go that 36 feet, and it comes out to 40 miles per hour! If you think in terms of 40 miles per hour, that's not Teddy driving, that's something else! So right away you begin to think of an engineered accident. And when you begin to think about this in those terms, you've got an entirely different frame of reference.

Political Assassination

Now, why would anybody want to engineer an accident involving Teddy Kennedy, and why would Teddy say that he drove off the bridge himself? These aren't easy questions to answer. But nine months after the Chappaquiddick "accident" Ted Kennedy announced "I am not a candidate for the Democratic nomination in the presidential race for campaign '72." If you begin to understand that this is a political assassination in order to get rid of the front-running Democrat, then you have the answer. If you can assume that answer for a while, you can go back and prove it to yourself, because there is no other answer as far as I personally am concerned, after looking at all the facts up close.

It could have been a roadblock, they could have taken Teddy out forcibly, or pretended to be Secret Service. Curiously, Teddy said in a magazine article a few years later "I always thought Mary Jo got away."

It took me a long time to take all the facts of the Chappaquiddick case—the damage to the car, the damage to Ted Kennedy, hit on the head and possibly kicked in the back, as the doctor's report suggests. If you take the fact that the car windshield is smashed, the roof is damaged, and every panel on the right side of the car is completely smashed, with all the glass on the inside of the car, the driver side mirror post hanging by one bolt; if you take all these facts, then you have to ask how could you have all of that with a car that could only have limped off the edge of a bridge at 22 miles per hour? The answer is, of course, you can't.

Ass Over Tea Kettles

It is physically impossible for a car to do a flip of that sort and wind up with damage to front, roof and sides all at once! You can, by going ass over tea kettles, shatter the windshield and damage the roof, but you can't get the right side. If you fall off the edge, maybe you could get the right side damaged, but those panels are really beat in and the windows are completely shattered, with the glass on the inside. That doesn't happen at 22 miles per hour. Therefore, it seems safe to say that Ted Kennedy's Chappaquiddick accident was engineered.

Let's figure out what happened to the front mirror post. If you take a line, secure it to the wheel, pass it out through the vent and secure it to the mirror post so that the front wheels stay straight, what's going to happen when the front wheel hits the rubrail on the edge of the bridge? Something has to give! So with the car moving at about 40 miles per hour by the time it hit the rubrail, going at a slight angle so that the right front wheel hit slightly before the left, there was a shimmy there, a pull. The front wheel wants to turn but the line securing the steering wheel pulls straight, so the weakest point lets go, that's the bolt holding the mirror post. I think that if the front wheels hadn't been tied somehow to the steering wheel, the wheels would have turned and the car would have rolled over sideways off the bridge. The car didn't roll, it flipped back end over front. There was, of course, no mention of anyone finding any rope.

One question might be how to get the car going that fast. There are some very smart people who could figure that one out. It could have been a wedge holding down the gas pedal or maybe they just boosted up the carburetor or got into the linkage somehow. There's plenty of ways to engineer an accident. But in this case, I'm thinking once the friction is gone from the rear wheels and the engine goes from, let's say, 2000 to 5000 revs, you've got a tremendous force. It must have been fairly loud! With the front end heavier than the rear end, the weight of the engine weighing the front down, the rear end flies up and over.

Mary Jo's Blouse

The facts of the victim, Mary Jo Kopechne, are also important: the victim had I believe a .10 blood alcohol level. That is not consistent with Mary Jo's behavior! All of her friends, the so-called "Boiler Room Girls" stated emphatically that she was a non-drinker! Therefore, when you've got .10 alcohol, which was practically legally drunk in the state of Massachusetts at the time, there's something that doesn't jibe, so you have to question that one. Put that with another fact, that on the back of the blouse, almost all the way down the back and both sleeves, a very large area, and especially around the collar, residual traces of blood were found in testing about three weeks after the accident.

I found out about it at the time and I called the coroner's office at the Public Works Department on Commonwealth Avenue in Boston, I think his name was McHugh, and I spoke to him on the telephone. I explained that I was writing a book on Chappaquiddick and would like to make a drawing of the blouse and the areas where the residual blood traces were found. He initially agreed to provide the information and wanted me to call him back the next week. When I called back for verification a week later, he was very upset and stated in no uncertain terms that he could not speak about the Kennedy case. He wanted nothing to do with me. The fact that I had even gotten through to him was bad news apparently. So in my book, You the Jury In Re: Chappaquiddick, I have a sketch which approximates where the residual blood traces were found according to the available published reports.

Now it's interesting, where do you suppose all that blood came from? John Farrar is the diver who pulled Mary Jo out of the car and she came up and he held her and passed her up to Jim Arena, the Chief, who was sitting on the upturned car near the gas tank. Jim Arena held her and then put her in the boat and took her over and laid her on a white stretcher, and the doctor had a look at her. Not one of those people said anything about blood! I even established from the hospital people at the time that there was no blood seen on the white stretcher where she had lain on her back. Not a trace! So what happened, I propose, is that the blood stains had been there when she went into the water (I'll jump ahead a little bit) at about 1:00 a.m. and John Farrar didn't get her out until 5 minutes to 9, so she'd been there about 8 hours. In the interim, the salt water tides coming in and out washed all the blood stains out of the blouse. There's no question, it's very simple. You're in a big laundromat: salt water is excellent of that kind of thing.

As soon as District Attorney Dinis found out about the residual blood stains, he knew there was foul play, and that prompted him to request an exhumation. He went to her family and said he wanted to exhume the body to see if they could find anything. Well, if you take the fact of the blood stains and the level of alcohol in the blood, and the fact that the girl was not a drinker, you've got to get alcohol into that girl somehow. How was that done? The only way I can think of is some type of needle and syringe. And I'm thinking that perhaps they hit a blood vessel when they punctured the neck. They got the alcohol in but punctured something, and the blood ended up all over the back of the blouse when she was laying in the back seat.

The Ambush: A Scenario

The mortician, Walter Frye, went over the body very, very carefully and found no bumps, no scratches, no nothing. Just a little something under the fingernails where she had been clawing in the footwell of the upturned car. Quite peculiar. What happened? You also have to try to figure out how

Teddy got his wounds. He was hit on the head and on the back and was in a neck brace for a time. His medical exam indicated that he was more damaged than Mary Jo except, of course, that Mary Jo lost her life. So if you put all these facts together, a possible scenario emerges:

Teddy and Mary

Jo left the party at the same time, most in attendance at the party say it was 11:15. Mary Jo was tired and Teddy was tired, he had raced that day, so he offered her a ride back to the hotel, which meant they had to make the last ferry before midnight. Somewhere between the cottage and the ferry, somebody intervened. I call it an ambush. It depends on what you mean by ambush. It could have been a roadblock, they could have taken Teddy out forcibly, or pretended to be Secret Service. Curiously, Teddy said in a magazine article a few years later "I always thought Mary Jo got away." So somehow they were separated, and he didn't know where she was. They took Ted out from behind the wheel and they took Mary Jo in the Oldsmobile.

I say "they" because this scenario needs a team of maybe five people: two people to take care of Mary Jo, two people to take care of Teddy and one other person. There is no way that this could have been pulled off without this person: the one who impersonated Ted Kennedy. So the ambush occurs, two people take the Olds with Mary Jo in it and the other two take the car they've got and go right across on the ferry. I have no problem with that way of getting Teddy across to his room at the Shiretown Inn, as opposed to his ridiculous claim that he swam across. Just knock him out, a blow to the head and a kick in the back, and whatever else it takes, and hide him in the backseat. He was drugged the whole night, and the way I see it, he was just another passenger that night on the ferry. There was no moon, it was very dark.

One of the facts not very well known is that Teddy's wallet was in fact missing after the accident. He did not have his wallet when he got to the station. Go back and ask: why? Because they'd gotten his wallet in order to prove to [Kennedy associates] Gargan and Markham that they had him in hand. They may have even forced Gargan and Markham to write Kennedy a note telling him not to do one damn thing until they got over to him on the first ferry in the morning. That explains Ted's inactivity until morning. The operatives may have engineered a spoof kidnapping of Mary Jo. In other words, we've got Mary Jo, wait by the pay phone at Chappaquiddick for ransom instructions. When they got there, the body had been found in the car and there went the ransom story. It was all over. They had been had.

What Did Look See?

Of course, the ambush team had radios and communicated to each other all night. The other two meanwhile plied Mary Jo with alcohol and had her slumped in the back seat. At about 12:30, the Olds drove right past the cottage and when it got to the corner, they did the wrong thing. They drove straight ahead down Cemetery Road. At that particular moment, as fate would have it, Huck Look, the Deputy Sheriff and a bouncer at the Yacht Club, sees the Olds driving onto Cemetery Road, which everyone knows is a dead end. The Olds stops and backs up, appearing to be lost. Huck Look stopped his car and got out in order to give directions to the driver, but the driver apparently did not want directions, seeing that Look was a cop or some kind of official, and he sped away down Dike Road toward the bridge. The time according to the testimony of Huck Look was 12:45. The car had a Massachusetts license plate beginning with the letter L, and the number contained two 7's, one at the beginning and one at the end.

When Huck Look heard about the accident in the morning and drove down to the bridge, he found the dark Oldsmobile sedan he had seen the night before, with the license plate L78-207. He was the one who put his finger right on it! With his testimony, you've got the car on dry land at a quarter to one. Teddy says he drove straight down toward the ferry, took a wrong turn onto Dike Road, and drove off the bridge at 11:30, at most fifteen minutes after the leaving the party. You've got those two conflicting statements made at inquest, and nobody ever looks at them and says, wait a minute!

The Cover-Up

Huck Look has never changed his testimony, and Ted Kennedy has never changed his testimony! He's a politician and he wants those people off his back, and that is what he is going to continue to say. That is always going to be his position, but his position is incorrect! It's correct for him only because he was told that he damn well better say he was driving or someone else will lose their life! I'm sure that the word he received, through Gargan and Markham via [Ted] K-2 the impersonator, was that if Ted Kennedy goes to the White House, it's not going to be very healthy for him.

Ted surely must have realized it was curtains for his political career. He's got a great big family, from Rose all the way down to the youngest grandchild, to worry about. They could take any one of them, or even Ted. It was the perfect political assassination, where the victim is politically dead, but he's alive and breathing, and walking around, and he's having a hard time mentally. If you put yourself in Ted Kennedy's position you would realize that he has really had a bad time, because he knows what happened. I don't know if he knows who killed Jack, or who killed Bobby, but we know it wasn't Lee Harvey Oswald and it wasn't Sirhan Sirhan. And it sure as hell wasn't Edward Moore Kennedy who killed Mary Jo Kopechne.

I don't know whether Teddy's ever been able to find out who engineered the accident at Chappaquiddick, but we can guess what would happen if his inquiries went anywhere near the FBI or the CIA. You know, Hoover was terribly interested in everything that was happening at that time. He was absolutely certain it was Ted Kennedy driving that car before any information had been gathered. Here it is 3:30 on the afternoon of the accident, and Hoover already knew it was Teddy driving, so we know damn well it was Hoover behind the whole thing. [Aside from the FBI,] where else do you find a bunch of guys that can engineer an accident like that? You look for the CIA.

Kennedy's attorneys, Ropes & Gray of Boston, went to the Supreme Court to keep the inquest secret. They had to do all kinds of things in order to keep information from the press. There had to be an effective cover-up to make Teddy's story, as stupid as it was, pass as what really happened. In effect, Teddy's story itself operated as the cover-up for the engineered accident. The cover-up story was so effective that the media bought into it and reacted exactly as the people who engineered the accident expected them to: a blonde, booze and the beach, that's all they need. You're not able to think about what really happened, after you're bombarded with this stuff for three months in the newspapers, radio, television. The Teddy bashing was phenomenal. There's no way anybody can think straight after the media gets through with their character assassination. The media is part of the whole problem!

Accident or Ambush?

An interview with Robert Cutler

by Joan D'Arc

There was a lot of talk about how much Ted Kennedy had to drink that night, but has there ever been any proof?

I don't think there was much booze at the party. It was mainly a cookout. I interviewed Ross Richards, who sat with his wife and talked with Teddy at the Shiretown Inn for a half an hour the morning after the accident. He said "Ted didn't have a hangover. I had the hangover. I wish I looked like Teddy!" This was just before [Kennedy associates] Joe Gargan and Paul Markham showed up and dragged Ted off to speak with him in his room.

Did anyone ever see Kennedy's wet clothing?

No, I don't think so. Had he really swam back to the other side of the channel, he would have staggered home all by himself.

Ted would have had a very long walk back to the Inn, if he did swim, according to your analysis of where the current would have carried him.

That's right. Of course, he didn't swim at all. He was taken across either by boat or on the ferry, hidden in the back seat of someone else's car.

So, why does Ted lie about it?

He has to. Because they've threatened to kill him or another family member, of course, the same way they killed Bobby only thirteen months before.

And his sidekicks, Gargan and Markham, know the truth as well?

Oh hell yes. They were told to tell Teddy to keep his mouth shut, or we'll get someone else in your family.

So they told Ted to say he swam back to the Inn?

I don't really think so. I think they were basically free to say whatever they wanted as long as Teddy said he was driving. I think Gargan and Markham made that one up, that he swam across.

So, let's get back to the morning chat with Mr. and Mrs. Richards. Teddy is talking with them and in walks Gargan and Markham...

Yes, soaking wet, and they quickly usher Ted into his room to speak in private.

Is this the first Ted knows about Mary Jo's death?

This is the first possible time. They may not have known for sure yet at that time, but their clothes were soaking wet, indicating that they had been diving around in the water. They may have seen her body in the car in the early morning and got on the first ferry at 7:00. The first thing the three of them do is zap right back over to Chappaquiddick to wait by the public pay phone. I think they probably were going to get some ransom money for Mary Jo, so they went to the phone to receive a call, not to make a call, as others have assumed. I believe that Gargan and Markham had been instructed to be at the telephone by 9:00 a.m. to make arrangements to get Mary Jo back.

So when Teddy states in his police report that morning, "When I fully realized what happened, I immediately went to the police"...

That was the only truthful statement he made the whole day, that's the most important statement.

He didn't know anything about Mary Jo until Gargan and Markham informed him in the morning?

He knew they had been separated, but that's all he knew. As I said, he may have been told she had been kidnapped and was awaiting further instructions on that. I think that those two, Gargan and Markham, were up all night looking for Mary Jo and that sometime after sunrise they finally spotted the car and dove in, and may have even seen that she was in there. Because when they showed up at the Inn and grabbed Teddy away from his nonchalant conversation, they were soaking wet! And the judge wouldn't allow that, the inquest records state that they were "damp." If they were allowed to be "soaking wet" on the record, then that would be inconsistent with Ted's story that they had dove in for Mary Jo around midnight. I don't think Ted ever went swimming at all.

Didn't Kennedy make several phonecalls during the night?

I really don't think so. I believe he was out cold all night. They certainly had his wallet, so they could have done anything they wanted. K-2, the Kennedy impersonator, could have made phonecalls. I believe he had Ted's wallet. There were some calls made by Gargan and Markham from the police station. Teddy didn't even have money for a phonecall in the morning from the station. He borrowed a dime. His wallet was definitely missing. I don't believe he personally made any phonecalls during the night.

So, Chappaquiddick happened 13 months after Bobby Kennedy's assassination...

Yes. And I might add that a third Kennedy hit would have stretched the lone nut theory to the breaking point. It had to be a scandal, not a straight hit. People would have been convinced of a conspiracy had Ted been assassinated. So, what could scandalize him out of the presidential race? On the front of the Boston Herald in early 1969, Ted was talking about getting the hell out of the Vietnam War. In other words, Teddy had picked up the torch and went right on doing what Bobby and Jack would have done. And by this time, they figured out this guy has got to go. Nixon was paranoid about Ted Kennedy, absolutely bananas.

Yes, I notice a quote in your book which comes from the Watergate tapes about Chappaquiddick.

Yes, basically, I think Nixon knew that something was going to happen at Chappaquiddick; he didn't know exactly what, but Hoover was planning something. Hoover was behind the whole Chappaquiddick hit. There was a document that clarified that Hoover got the information at 3:30 in the afternoon from somebody who had notified the FBI earlier, and the FBI sent a notice to Hoover to the effect that nobody's saying Ted was driving the car but, rest assured, "he was" And it's blanked out as to who sent it. I tried to find out who it was that informed the FBI, because that had to be around 12:30 or so the night of the "accident." Teddy would have just gotten off the island around that time. Somebody made sure the director of the FBI was perfectly content that everything had gone the way he expected it to. That's what I infer.

So you don't believe it was a renegade faction that pulled off the ambush at Chappaquiddick?

Well, however they pulled it off, they've got a bunch of people in the CIA who've been doing this sort of thing all over the world. All they do is sit around and figure out how to pull it off. And they have a wonderful time. I still maintain that they had a boat, a small outboard was seen at about 2:30 by a few witnesses. There are so many details. The information is there. You aren't able to follow every single one, you make the best scenario possible given the facts. You can't bother with every single little piece of information. Basically, I think my solution is the best one. There are small details that need to be worked out, maybe it was done this way, maybe that way. I think there was a Kennedy double I call K-2 who got Gargan and Markham to get in the Valiant with him and took them and gave them the kidnapping story, then got over to Shiretown by a small outboard and talked to "Peachey" at the Inn. K-2 would be the guy at the bottom of the stairs who asked Peachey what time it was and Peachey responded it was 2:25 a.m., establishing "Kennedy's" whereabouts at that hour. Actually, Kennedy was probably still out cold in his room at that time.

So when "Kennedy" or K-2 walked back to the cottage for help, how did he alert the rest of the party that something had happened? He requested help from a distance in the dark and slipped into the back seat of the Valiant?

Yes! Can you imagine him doing that?

He'd never do a thing like that. If he was serious about getting Mary Jo, he'd come up and say, "Hey gang, I've got a problem, let's go!" It's totally ridiculous to believe he would stand in the dark shadows and request Ray LaRosa to "get me Paul, and get me Joe" and slip into the back seat of the Valiant. He would have walked right up to Ray and requested assistance. Ray is a fireman, a scuba diver, a rescue man just like John Farrar! He would have said "Ray, we need you!"

Was there ever any question about identification of the voice?

Nobody even brought it up! What happened to me was I suddenly realized that Ray LaRosa did not really see Ted Kennedy as he stood in the dark, he only heard him! The same with Russell Peachey at the Shiretown Inn. And there you solve the problem with K-2, the Kennedy double.

So, in the dark, in the shadows, someone the same build, same height as Kennedy...

I think Nixon knew that something was going to happen at Chappaquiddick; he didn't know exactly what, but Hoover was planning something. Hoover was behind the whole Chappaquiddick hit.

He could even have had a voice box of some sort, for all we know, or a mask, or a tape recording. They have those you know. E. Howard Hunt had a voice box when he talked to Dietre Beard in the hospital. They have ways of making your voice, when you talk, sound like someone else. The CIA has some great technology.

Do you think these agents stopped the car shortly after Ted and Mary Jo left the party and said something like "Senator, come with us, we'll take the girl home"?

Well, I think there must have been more to it than that. The car was badly damaged along the right side. Kennedy may have put up a fight, because he was hit on the head. In effect, it was an ambush but its hard to say exactly how it was done. A roadblock of some sort perhaps. They probably did not have guns, because residents would have heard something, and bullets would indicate murder rather than "accident." So they had to do it by force. Maybe Mary Jo even got away, scrambled away for a short time and was caught up with.

Kennedy's television statement a week later claimed that somewhere in the back of his mind he wanted to think she was somewhere else, not in the car.

Yes, that's why I wonder if she got away. They had definitely been separated, and he wasn't sure where she was until morning. It was very well done!

What good it does knowing this 25 years later, I don't know. Do Mary Jo's parents suspect any of this?

If they do, they don't believe it. They have my book, and they won't read it I don't think. I've tried to get to them, but it doesn't work.

Why did they fight the exhumation and autopsy?

It has a good deal to do with religion, I guess. To leave her in one piece. It's totally emotional. Also, the implications, rumors, what are they going to get out of it? What were they going to prove with an autopsy? There was nothing they could find. As far as the needle mark in the back of the neck, maybe (for intravenous alcohol delivery). Now that would have been something. But they already knew she had a high level of alcohol. Maybe they wanted to know if she'd been raped, that would be one thing.

So the official cause of death was not drowning?

No. Asphyxiation was the cause of death. That means she used up all the oxygen and you can't breathe anymore. Drowning is asphyxiation by immersion. There was less than a cupful of water in Mary Jo. The water was secondary to her running out of oxygen in the pocket of air she had been breathing in the footwell. She was alive a couple of hours, at least, at most three. You can pinpoint that by going backwards from 9:00 a.m. when she was found under water in almost complete rigor mortis. Her body floated up with no effort. A drowned body would not float for at least 100 hours.

So, when the car flipped over, it held a pocket of air in the footwell for her to breathe in?

Yes, but the judge at inquest wouldn't allow any of that. The trunk was completely dry. They couldn't allow people to find out about that, because then you have the girl alive in there all that time. It looks really bad then. It's much easier to say she just went in and Teddy couldn't get to her in time and she drowned. John Alba, the guy with the tow truck, he was going to testify about all the bubbles that came up from the trunk and the footwell, but they wouldn't allow any of his testimony. It would have screwed up Ted's story that she drowned and nothing could be done to save her. They didn't want

BEYOND LITTLE GRAY MEN

Abduction: Human Encounters With Aliens by Dr. John E. Mack, M.D. $22

The concept of alien beings interfacing in the lives of human beings has intruded irrevocably into mainstream American culture with the publication of Abduction by Dr. John E. Mack, M.D., a Pulitzer Prize-winning psychiatrist who practices at Harvard University.

This apparently ominous phenomenon of alien abductions has been known for centuries and investigated thoroughly during the past two decades. But by virtue of his impeccable establishment credentials, Mack has given a new and powerful legitimacy to the age-old series of strange encounters between humans and otherworldly beings which have previously been consigned either to the dustbin of occult sciences or the psycho ward.

Through the emotional testimony of 13 "experiencers" culled from among the many Dr. Mack has treated comes a body of new knowledge that vividly reflects a new perspective on the current status of human evolution, namely, the realization that a consciousness existing in other realities for a long time has been trying to communicate with the materialist human mindset.

Whether or not UFOs are real is no longer a question, but whether they come from outer space or another, unperceived dimension remains a mystery. What this book firmly establishes, however, is that those who have claimed to have been abducted by strange, gray beings are neither psychopathological nor delusional. The consistency of the hypnotically regressed experiences appears to be startling proof of a bonafide alien species which can appear instantaneously from a dimension we currently cannot even imagine. Despite this horrifying evidence, all the abductees interviewed by Mack appear to respect and admire an alien presence that they see as crucial to the survival of the human species. Their testimony argues that the aliens are, in fact, here to help us.

The narrative of Abduction shows that Mack genuinely respects the sincerity of the experiencers. "The transmission of information from the alien beings appears to be a fundamental aspect of the abduction phenomenon," writes Mack, and "the information the abductees receive is concerned primarily with the fate of the earth in the wake of human destructiveness." Mack writes: "Abductions seem to be concerned primarily with two related projects: changing human consciousness to prevent the destruction of the earth's life, and a joining of two species for the creation of a new evolutionary form." He suggests that "an expanded epistemology, especially in psychology, may demand the legitimization (re-legitimization) of neglected areas of ourselves as instruments of knowing."

Martin's definition of mind control is broad enough to encompass the concept of compulsory public schooling, the subject of a fascinating interview with John Taylor Gatto, author of Dumbing Us Down. The issue also features excerpts from Walter Bowart's hard-to-find book Operation Mind Control. Other features include Kenn Thomas' take on the reported dangers of electromagnetic radiation. His practical research included the use of a device to measure the electromagnetic field surrounding a check-out worker at a local supermarket. He found the worker was being exposed to a frighteningly high 200 milligauss ("So that's why I'm always so nervous," she observed.) Also, Lisa Crosby's well-researched report on the potential use of injectable microchips to identify and track humans (reprinted from her zine Eye) is a real eye-opener. All in all, a good fix for the discriminating conspiracy addict.

TALES FROM THE DARK SIDE

Compromised: Clinton, Bush and the CIA by Terry Reed and John Cummings, S.P.I. Books, 212-633-2022, $23.95

The life of a whistleblower is sad, lonely and dangerous.

American businessman Terry Reed's troubles began in Mexico when he discovered that his company warehouse was being used by the CIA for transshipment of cocaine. He found a crate full of the white powder, and realizing he was in over his head, he left Mexico with his wife and family on a cross-country odyssey. This journey lasted for years, as the Reeds evaded FBI and CIA pursuit. Finally, after their arrest on trumped-up charges, they spent three more years in court battles with the government. Now acquitted of all charges, they have a book that chronicles their "adventures."

Compromised: Clinton, Bush and the CIA by Terry Reed and John Cummings is a devastating look at the dark side of government, describing behind-the-scenes details of the so-called Iran-Contra scandal and the Arkansas Connection. Most importantly, it names the key players, dates and events. Some of the questions it explores:

•Did Bill Clinton really let the state of Arkansas be used as a "banana republic" money laundry for the CIA's drug-dealing and gun-running profits, estimated at $9 million per week?

•Were the Arkansas Development Finance Authority (ADFA) and the Arkansas "bond daddies" (brokerage companies) complicit partners in this money laundering operation?

•Did CIA agent Oliver North and his controller William P. Barr, George Bush's attorney general, knowingly deal in illegal guns and drugs, or were they misled by "patriotic" sentiments?

One of the most electrifying anecdotes in Compromised concerns the meeting of Bill Clinton, Oliver North (aka John Cathey), Felix Rodriguez (aka Max Gomez), William P. Barr (aka Robert Johnson), CIA agent Akihide Sawahata, and Terry Reed:

Under CIA Director William Casey's plan, the CIA needed other companies that would be a source of secretly-produced weapons that would find their way into the hands of the Contras. These selected businesses needed payment to perform these services for the CIA, and that cash came to them conveniently in a legal and undetectable manner, through [Clinton's] ADFA, in the form of industrial development loans backed by tax-free development bonds. The CIA should have been showing a profit through accrued interest on their secured investments. But a problem had arisen. As Johnson had said, the "laundry was shrinking."

And Johnson [aka Barr] was not happy about that, as evidenced by the way he was firing back at Clinton. It was apparent that Johnson knew Clinton and his people had not abided by his agreement with the Agency. "Our deal was for you to have 10 per cent of the profits, not 10 percent of the gross," Johnson sternly admonished Clinton. "This has turned into a feeding frenzy by your good ole boy sharks, and you've had a hand in it too, Mr. Clinton ... This ADFA of yours is double-dipping. Our deal with you was to launder our money. You get 10 percent after costs and after post-tax profits. No one agreed for you to start loaning our money out to your friends through your ADFA so that they could buy machinery to build our guns. That wasn't the deal ... That's why we're pulling out of Arkansas..."

Read the book and decide for yourself. Mr. Cummings' and Mr. Reed's narrative is as fast-paced as any John Grisham novel. It's an explosive page-turner that will keep you enthralled, and it's one of the most informative books on how the state and federal governments work together in criminal enterprise.

5/5/2000 Ice: the Ultimate Disaster
Richard W. Noone, $14.00

Does the Great Pyramid contain a complicated mathematical message of warning built into its structure by survivors of an earth catastrophe 6,000 years ago? Richard Noone presents information from varied sources as he presents a cyclical theory of history, including secrets of ancient Freemasonry, pyrami-dology, lost civilizations, plate tectonics, Stonehenge, Atlantis, and evidence of pre-historic earth disasters.

On May 5 in the year 2000, Noone explains, for the first time in 6,000 years, all the planets of our solar system will be aligned with the earth in practically a straight line across space. Antarctica's ice mass will be 3 to 4 miles thick, this massive ice accumulation creating a weight imbalance in the earth's axis. As this ice mass grows heavier, the earth's tilt will not be able to overcome the centrifugal force of its spin. The ice masses at the poles, consisting of trillions of tons of ice and water, will be hurled suddenly, within three or four hours, toward the equator—the point of greatest spin. The hunkey-dorey news is this planetary disaster will destroy our civilization as it has wiped out ancient super-civilizations of the past, possibly every 6000 years!

Noone's bibliography is immense, quoting from a wide array of books, articles and papers and the pictures, diagrams and maps in this book are astounding. Interviews with well-known geologists, archaeologists and climatologists add to the convincing case for the doomsday prophecies of Nostradamus. Read this book and weep.

Johnny Carson, the CIA, and the S&L Crisis

by Alex Constantine

Years before the public was made aware of the name Charles Keating, hints of impending financial disaster loomed in the back pages of the major dailies. In October 1982, the same month that President Reagan signed deregulation of the nation's thrift industry into law, the Commercial Bank of California in Beverly Hills announced a $2.5 million loan loss.

A founder of the bank, legendary NBC Tonight Show host Johnny Carson, paid $1,950,000 for his shares of Commercial stock, and became the CEO. But the bank's financial troubles weren't all that preyed on Carson's mind. Tim Hoffman, an informant in the joint FBI/DEA investigation of John DeLorean, had informed agents that the auto maker had a partner in the cocaine trade—a certain well-known talk show host.

The alleged partnership was not as far-fetched as it might have seemed. Carson was a close friend of DeLorean. According to SEC registers, the comedian also owned 250,000 shares in DeLorean Motors, a $500,000 investment. Carson's assignee on the DeLorean board of directors was Carson's best friend and financial adviser, Henry Bushkin, a known mob associate.

After the arrest of John DeLorean in the ABSCAM sting, Howard Weitzman, DeLorean's attorney, told reporters that developments in the investigation had been closely followed by then U.S. Attorney General Edwin Meese III. Meese's cohort, J. Peter Grace, a leading light of Reagan's deregulation campaign, retained DeLorean on his payroll as a consultant, and was a director of DeLorean's company. Attorney General Meese, announced Weitzman, had made "key decisions" in building a case against DeLorean on charges of cocaine trafficking. DeLorean insisted that he'd been "set up." He was, in fact, a cut-out, the designated fall guy, and the jury believed the cover story. But the Justice Department was desperate to staunch public exposure of others involved in the laundering operation.

Washington columnist Jack Anderson published a transcript of an audio tape after the arrest, in which De-

Lorean attempted to renege in a cocaine deal set up by the FBI. "When he tried to back out," Anderson wrote, "the FBI's undercover informant threatened to bash in his daughter's head."

The CIA's Bank of the Stars

The ABSCAM trap had originally been set for one William Morgan Hetrick, described by authorities as one of the foremost cocaine distributors on the west coast, and by his attorney as "a man who may border on genius." Hetrick was arrested with DeLorean on October 19, 1982. A pilot and operator of a private flying service in the desert community of Mojave, Hetrick had served four years in Vietnam, and went on to work with Nugan Hand Bank in Australia—the notorious CIA fiduciary with ties to the international mafia and third world dictators. The bank was looted by its CIA directors—foreshadowing the fate of the country's S&Ls—and collapsed after the lurid suicide of a founder, leaving a $50 million hole in the Australian economy. Although the bank was an independent business run by former CIA operatives, it provided cover for the Agency's underground arms/drugs network. (One of Nugan Hand's clients, Ferdinand Marcos, entered the American S&L scene by purchasing Redwood Savings in San Francisco. A Marcos cohort took over San Francisco's Oceanic Bank, and hired a former CIA Manila station chief to run it.)

DeLorean's intelligence connections were almost turned to his advantage in court. The Los Angeles Times reported: "The Drug Enforcement Administration, the CIA (and) the FBI were ordered to turn over documents to DeLorean in advance of the trial...for private inspection by the court." Also named in the judge's orders were "Army intelligence, the National Security Council, the Internal Revenue Service, U.S. Customs, several departments within the Justice Department, the State Department, several field offices of the FBI, and the Defense Intelligence Agency and the Pentagon.

Unfortunately for DeLorean's attorneys, when they asked to review documents concerning contacts between the U.S. and British governments during the sting, the judge refused, insisting that "communications between sovereigns are meant to be confidential."

As a cover and base of operations for the DeLorean arrest, federal agents posed as crooked bankers for Eureka Federal Savings in the San Francisco Bay area. The president of Eureka was Kenneth Kidwell, a familiar face on the Nevada casino circuit, and a volatile eccentric in the stodgy California banking establishment. Kidwell was the protagonist in a series of bizarre events. One evening police spotted his car weaving on the road. They suspected he was drunk. The officers searched him and turned up a .38 strapped to his leg and a .357 magnum. The pistols were loaded with armor-piercing, teflon-coated bullets. The police said that Kidwell had tried to talk his way out of the arrest by flashing a gold deputy sheriff's badge conferred upon him by a ranking official of the San Mateo Sheriff's Office. Some banker. The ultimate irony was that Eureka, the FBI's cover in the De-

Among the dubious loans made by Carson financial adviser Henry Bushkin was $450,000 to Jack Catain of the Angelo Bruno crime family in Philadelphia.

Lorean sting, was saddled with some $32 million in delinquent loans—170 of them—to organized crime figures.

A key informant in the DeLorean sting was James Hoffman, who often boasted to his neighbors of daring covert exploits in Latin America, according to DeLorean biographer Hillel Levin. Hoffman proposed the cocaine deal to DeLorean and later turned evidence against him. Thus did DeLorean become the sacrificial cut-out.

Hoffman had, in turn, been fingered by Robert Durand, his partner in an Oregon airline used to smuggle cocaine from Bolivia into the U.S. The drug profits were laundered at Commercial Bank of Beverly Hills.

Commercial Bank began to flounder when the board's drug and organized crime connections caught the attention of federal regulators. FBI and DEA investigators refused to buy Hoffman's tip that Johnny Carson was involved in money laundering with DeLorean and the CIA, a charge that Carson publicly denied. But there was a surfeit of financial chicanery at Commercial, enough to prompt the FDIC to impose a $10 million lawsuit against bank officials, who had extended loans to clients "associated directly or indirectly with organized crime." In 1983, Carson's Beverly Hills thrift filed bankruptcy papers.

Among the dubious loans made by Carson financial adviser Henry Bushkin was $450,000 to Jack Catain of the Angelo Bruno crime family in Philadelphia. The FDIC couldn't help noticing that Bushkin was also an officer of Catain's TMX Marketing, a retail distributor of car alarms in Westwood, California. Catain eventually sold TMX to the North Ireland Development Agency, which subsidized the DeLorean Motors plant.

Shortly after DeLorean's arrest, several of the principals had a run of misfortune. Colin Chapman, DeLorean's partner in the car business, had a heart attack and died. Alan David Saxon, an officer of "Carson's Bank," apparently committed suicide. Saxon, who was known to travel frequently to places like Switzerland and Brazil, told friends that he feared he would be killed for his knowledge of the bank's business connections. Following Saxon's demise, investigators discovered that $60-80 million was "missing" from the coffers of Commercial Bank. The Los Angeles Police Department immediately cremated Saxon's body. Soon, two new directors of the bank reported that their lives had been threatened.

They took up shooting practice at the Beverly Hills Gun Club.

No more PARANOIA?

Hey, if your local bookstore runs out of PARANOIA, have 'em get more from their distributor! And if they don't carry it, tell 'em you want your PARANOIA!

In the heart of Washington, D.C., there is a large statue and monument honoring the most important founder of the Ku Klux Klan. Inscribed on the base of the statue are the words, "poet" (the terrorist anthem of the KKK was his most famous literary work) and "jurist" (he was called the KKK's chief judiciary officer, and reputedly wrote the organization manual for the terrorist anti-black movement after the U.S. Civil War.) The immense, bearded figure of Confederate General Albert Pike is looming over a public square in the nation's capital. Why has it never been pulled down in that predominantly black city?

(Secret Roots of the KKK)

by Anton Chaitkin
Part I

This is the edited text of a speech delivered by Mr. Chaitkin to a Labor Day weekend conference of the Schiller Institute in suburban Washington, D.C. It originally appeared in the New Federalist (v6, #35), PO Box 889, Leesburg, VA 22075, $20 for 50 weekly issues. Illustrations for this article appeared (unaltered) in James Ridgeway's Blood in the Face (Thunder's Mouth Press, 1990), $19.95.

The statue is a tribute to the influence of Pike's organization. It has power in the Executive Branch and the Congress, and it is decisive in the courts. It has great power in all branches of law enforcement and the military. Do I mean that the Ku Klux Klan has such sway over the government? No, I'm speaking here of the "Scottish Rite of Freemasonry Southern Jurisdiction," of which Pike was the chief, or "Sovereign Grand Commander."

The Ku Klux Klan, the Southern Confederacy, and the pre-Civil War secession movement were a single, continuous project, with Pike's "Scottish Rite" at its center. Though the Confederacy was defeated, this project lives on today, and now dominates U.S. political life.

Look at Baker & Botts, the Houston family firm and power base of [former] Secretary of State James A. Baker III. This law firm was formed after the Civil War by die-hard Confederate and Masonic officials in Albert Pike's Scottish Rite and military clique. With their British imperial racial notions, Baker & Botts and Scottish Rite freemasonry have dominated the Texas power structure ever since. Secretary Baker's grandfather, Captain James A. Baker, brought English race scientist Julian Huxley in to supervise the "race purification" study program for Texas, at Rice University. Secretary Baker's family wealth and power came from their representing Harriman, the international oil companies and George Bush's Zapata Petroleum, all sponsors of the population control (or ban-dark-babies) movement. This movement is synonymous with the Scottish Rite.

Bill Clinton was governor of Arkansas, a state infested by the tradition of Albert Pike, who was the Grand Dragon of the Ku Klux Klan in Arkansas. Look closely at the mind-set. Bill Clinton supports and carries out the death penalty, which in practice means executions of black people and poor people; and Clinton supports abortion. Clinton sat down and worked out his views on these issues with his Baptist minister, the late Rev. W.O. Vaught, who was Clinton's spiritual guide and virtual foster father.

As Vaught's son recently told me, Clinton and his pastor agreed that their religion permits the killing of prisoners and unborn children. The authority for this version of Christianity is derived from a peculiar, neo-pagan reading of the Old Testament. And the New Testament, with its ban on revenge and requirement to love, is considered irrelevant. They say that Christ was primarily concerned with fulfilling the Old Law of the Hebrews (as interpreted by this faction), and when Christ said love your enemy and turn the other cheek, he was really trying to re-enforce and impose the authority of the Roman Empire.

But whose religion is this? Well, the Reverend W.O. Vaught was a 32nd Degree Mason, a Sublime Prince of the Royal Secret within the Scottish Rite hierarchy.

What's Wrong With the Rite

What, then, is the Scottish Rite? Freemasonry was founded in the early 1700s in England by the so-called Venetian Party. This clique of British philosophical liberals had a few other experiments in human misery; for example: the East India Company, the royal African Company of slavers, and the slave colony of South Carolina. The Scottish Rite of Freemasonry, in particular, has a feudalist lore and legend, that is rooted in the black slave trade through the Caribbean Islands. In those islands, the pagan cults of slavers in ancient Rome, and Venice, were reused as anti-Judeo-Christian or Satanic cults and rituals for the amusement and gratification of the slave-traders, the British, Dutch, Bostonian, and Jewish-ethnic slave runners.

The Scottish Rite was formally organized in the U.S.A. in 1801, as a group of Tory partisans on the losing side of the American Revolution. The Scottish Rite came to rule over American Freemasonry during the nineteenth century. American colonial leaders had used the British Empire's Freemasonic lodges as political clubs, and had turned them against the British Crown in the American Revolution. But in the 1820s and 1830s, Masonry had been widely condemned and virtually run out of the U.S.A. as a would-be dictatorial grouping, an unwanted "British underground" intrusion into America. With British assistance, the Masonic lodges were reintroduced, under the control of the Scottish Rite based in Charleston, South Carolina, as a force for Southern secession. Since the 1840s, the U.S. Freemasonic structure has been strictly dominated by the Scottish Rite. The Scottish Rite dispenses the 4th and higher Masonic "degrees" of initiation, up to the 33rd. The Scottish Rite was divided into a Southern Jurisdiction, and a Northern Jurisdiction based in Boston, that is politically subordinate.

As for Bill Clinton: A spokesman for the Freemasonic Grand Lodge of Arkansas told me that although Clinton was a member of Freemasonry's Order of DeMolay as a young man, he is not now a Mason. I have been informed, however, that DeMolay membership is in fact a life membership.

The influence of Scottish Rite-dominated Freemasonry is shockingly pervasive in American government and culture, particularly in the South. But it has come under attack from some surprising quarters. The Southern Baptist Convention recently voted to conduct an investigation of Freemasonry in all forms, and to prepare a report on whether Masonry is compatible with Christianity. The Southern Baptist Convention, predominantly white, is the largest U.S. Protestant denomination, with 18 million church-goers. Freemasons make up a sizable proportion of this church's male membership, perhaps 20 percent. So this is a dramatic, emotional issue, a strongly factional issue within Protestant Christianity.

At their annual meeting last June in Indianapolis, the Baptists also adopted a resolution against secret societies, which reads in part: "we ... call upon all Christians to ... [avoid] any association which conflicts with clear Biblical ... teachings concerning the taking of oaths, the secrecy of activities, mystical knowledge, or racial discrimination...." A leader of this initiative, Dr. James Holly of Beaumont, Texas, told me this was aimed at the known fact that white Freemasonry is affiliated with the Ku Klux Klan.

The 2.5 million member Lutheran Church-Missouri Synod says in its official Handbook:

"The

Synod has declared itself firmly opposed to all societies, lodges and organizations of an un-Christian or anti-Christian character." The Lutheran Missouri Synod has also printed an attack on Freemasonry, which attacks its racialism and quotes from an absurd Masonic explanation of why blacks are excluded from white lodges:

"There are excellent reasons for this apparent race discrimination which only a Mason can fully understand ... [racial integration] would endanger the harmony of the lodge.... Secondly, although Negroes today may technically fulfill the Masonic requirement of being 'free,' their subordinate economic, educational, and cultural position is such that they hardly fulfill the spirit of that prerequisite to initiation."

"The True Religion of Masonry"

But let us ask, does Mr. Pike's organization have an "un-Christian or anti-Christian character"? Albert Pike responded in 1861 to a Mason who tried to claim the Scottish Rite was somehow Christian. Pike said that if the Scottish Rite "had a Christian basis, how did it chance that most of those who had possession of it in this country from 1763 to 1800 were Hebrews?" In fact, Pike and the Scottish Rite borrowed a good deal of numerology and other superstition from the Jewish cabala, a neo-pagan tradition in direct opposition to the Mosaic law underlying the Jewish religion. We shall deal later on with the relationship of Jews to the Scottish Rite.

But if the Rite is not specifically Christian, is it anti-Christian? We may judge this from Sovereign Grand Commander Pike's words, on his method, and on the true religion. In Pike's book, Morals and Dogma, the Scottish Rite's main guide to the universe, he explains his method:

"Magic is the science of the ancient magi.... Magic unites in one and the same science, whatsoever Philosophy can possess that is most certain, and Religion of the Infallible and the Eternal. It perfectly ... reconciles these two terms ... faith and reason ... those who accept [magic] as a rule may give their will a sovereign power that will make them the masters of all inferior beings and of all errant spirits; that is to say, will make them the Arbiters and Kings of the World...."

Pike wrote this particular section to instruct "Sublime Princes of the Royal Secret," gentlemen of the 32nd Degree, such as was Bill Clinton's preacher.

Thus, Pike is an illusionist, a conjurer, teaching his priesthood the means of controlling their squads of initiates. But what is the underlying belief? In France in 1889, Pike said:

"That which we must say to the crowd is, we worship a God, but it is the God one adores without superstition.... The Masonic religion should be, by all of us initiates of the high degrees, maintained in the purity of the Luciferian Doctrine. If Lucifer were not God, would Adonay (the God of the Christians) whose deeds prove his cruelty, perfidy and hatred of man, barbarism and repulsion to science, would Adonay and his priests calumniate him?

Yes, Lucifer is God, and unfortunately Adonay is also God. For the eternal law is that there is no light without shade, no beauty without ugliness, no white without black, for the absolute can only exist as two Gods.... Thus, the doctrine of Satanism is a heresy; and the true and pure philosophical religion is the belief in Lucifer, the equal of Adonay; but Lucifer, God of Light and God of Good, is struggling for humanity against Adonay, the God of Darkness and Evil."

This quote, by the way, is available in French and English in the Albert Pike vertical file at the library of the Scottish Rite Southern Jurisdiction at 1733 16th St. NW, Washington D.C.

The Terror Project

The Scottish Rite of Freemasonry, an instrument of British Empire strategy, directed a continuous offensive of murder and racist terrorism against the U.S.A. and neighboring countries, during the middle decades of the last century. We shall trace this endeavor, from the U.S. occupation of Mexico in the Mexican War (1846-48), to the slave owners' rebellion or U.S. Civil War (1861-65), through the Ku Klux Klan's war against Reconstruction of the South (1867-1870s).

A few individuals will come into view repeatedly as gang leaders and project directors: Boston's Albert Pike, boss of Arkansas; New York's John A. Quitman, boss of Mississippi; New York's John Slidell, boss of Louisiana; Slidell's nephew and partner, British banker August Belmont, boss of the Democratic Party; Slidell's trainee and partner, Britain's Judah Benjamin, boss of the Confederate secret service.

Patriots such as then-Congressman Abraham Lincoln saw the 1846 U.S. invasion of Mexico as a crime and folly, pushed by strategists of slavery who also aimed at the destruction of the U.S.A. Transplanted Southern Democrat John Slidell, and Whig leader Caleb Cushing, spokesman for Boston's opium and slave-running fortunes, had both planned and promoted the attack on Mexico.

As that first U.S. war of aggression drew to a close, volunteer General John A. Quitman became the military governor and dictator over Mexico City. The U.S.A. prepared to seize Mexico's northern territory, the area from California to Texas. Yet Quitman proposed to President Polk a plan for the forcible annexation of all Mexico, to be an area for negro slave plantations. During the peace negotiations, Quitman traveled as a conquering hero to Charleston, South Carolina. He was crowned a Sovereign Grand Inspector General of the Scottish Rite, and became the most powerful and prominent member of the Rite's Supreme Council.

John Quitman's grandfather was governor of the island of Curacao, the Dutch West India Company's slave concentration camp; his parents had fled the Caribbean slave revolts, taking their slaves with them to New York where John was born. In 1830, young Quitman had been formally commissioned by the Scottish Rite, leaders of the secession movement, to establish their organization in the state of Mississippi.

In the autumn of 1849, General Quitman held a meeting of anti-Union operatives from throughout the South. They resolved to call a formal convention of the Southern states for the following June, to begin the breakup of the United States.

Quitman became governor of Mississippi in January 1850, and his Nashville secession convention met from June 3 to 12. Delegates from nine states proclaimed the rights of slaveholders. Quitman and his clique meanwhile moved to provoke immediate civil war. He proposed to lead a private army from Texas, to conquer the new U.S. territory of New Mexico on behalf of slavery. President Zachary Taylor faced Quitman down. President Taylor was determined to bring the new southwest into the Union as free states. On June 21, 1850, nine days after the secession convention, Governor Quitman was indicted by a federal grand jury for violating the U.S. Neutrality Laws!

The charge was based on Quitman's leadership of a well-financed conspiracy to invade and "liberate" Cuba from Spanish rule. Then two weeks later, on July 3, President Taylor threatened to hang those "taken in rebellion against the Union." The next day the President fell ill, vomited blackish material, and died soon after. The Quitman prosecution was delayed. (You may recall that Taylor's body was recently dug up by Kentucky authorities, looking for evidence of arsenic poisoning.)

The following summer, 1851, Quitman brought fellow Mississippian Jefferson Davis to Massachusetts to meet with Caleb Cushing. They picked the man to be nominated by the Democrats for the U.S. presidency: volunteer General Franklin Pierce, a member of their clique in the Mexican War. Pierce surprised everyone by taking the nomination at the convention. Then, August Belmont, the U.S. representative of Britain's Rothschild banks, paid for Pierce's 1852 election campaign.

Though this blatant foreign intrusion caused a flare-up of resentment among the voters, Pierce was elected the 14th President, and his foreign and domestic backers took over. Caleb Cushing became U.S. attorney general. Jefferson Davis became secretary of war. Banker August Belmont became ambassador to Holland. Scottish Rite chief John Quitman was now ready for serious business. Some months earlier, when he had finally gone to trial, he was fortunate that Louisiana private attorney Judah Benjamin had been specially hired by the federal government to run the prosecution against Quitman. The jury was hung (rather than Quitman), and the charges were dropped. This outcome should not be too surprising to us, given prosecutor Benjamin's own growing role in the faction of which Gen. Quitman was then the shining star. Benjamin joined Slidell as a U.S. senator from Louisiana at the next election, and was a top leader of the slaveowners' insurrectionary government.

The Terrible Trio

Let's look for a minute at the trio of Slidell, Belmont, and Benjamin. Slidell had a master's degree in political dirty tricks, learned as a member of Aaron Burr's machine in New York and Louisiana. Slidell had politically schooled Belmont and had brought him into the Democratic Party, and Belmont married Slidell's niece. Slidell had also virtually adopted, taught and brought into politics the young Judah Benjamin, a British West Indian Jew living in Louisiana. Both Belmont, and his banking client Benjamin, were passionate backers of the expansion of slavery into Latin America.

When he was a young private secretary for the Rothschild family, Belmont had toured continental Europe doing financial and political intelligence work for the Rothschild bank, a pillar of the British royal family. With Britain meddling in Spain's civil war, the Rothschilds had sent Belmont off to the Spanish colony of Cuba in 1837 to "take charge of Rothschild interests" in Cuba. Belmont's ship stopped over in New York and he never went on to Cuba, but his subsequent U.S. banking and political career was often focused on Cuba's wealth and strategic location.

Following the 1853 presidential inauguration of their candidate Pierce, Scottish Rite chief John Quitman and his New York financiers signed a formal agreement making Quitman the "civil and military chief of the revolution" which they would impose on Cuba. Once he had seized the island, Quitman was due to receive $1 million from the proceeds of the revolutionary bonds the financiers were floating.

Quitman's criminal enterprise recruited as many as 50,000 U.S. mercenaries for the intended invasion. But the Spanish authorities brought these plans to grief. They emancipated most of Cuba's slaves, encouraged racial intermarriage, armed the freed blacks and recruited them into a militia through which they could defend their own freedom from the gringo attackers. The Spanish governor arrested Quitman's intriguer, Captain James D. Bulloch, when Bulloch brought his ship, the Black Warrior, into Havana.

Senator John Slidell of Louisiana demanded the U.S. neutrality laws be repealed. Attorney General Caleb Cushing called for a naval blockade around Cuba. But given the military realities, saner heads prevailed, and Quitman was placed under legal restraint. After the Black Warrior affair, the Quitman mercenary force was absorbed into a new, more aggressive movement with enlarged aims. The Knights of the Golden Circle appeared first in Cincinnati, under the supervision of the Scottish Rite's midwest organizer Killian Van Rensselaer, a longtime underground military operative for Britain in North America. So Cincinnati was the northern capital of the pro-slavery, Masonic terrorist underground. From there the Knights spread throughout Ohio, Indiana and Illinois, down the Mississippi to the Gulf south,

The Golden Circle was to be a new slave empire centered in Cuba. It would break up the U.S.A. and conquer Mexico, Central America and the Caribbean. The Knights armed and drilled up to 100,000 would-be emigrants, raiders, rapists, and slaveholders. They were organized into lodges called "castles," with Masonic signs, grips, and passwords. They were to kill the hated Catholic Hispanics, and fill their places with black slaves brought fresh from Africa. This is the first "North American Free Trade Agreement"!

(The Masonic imperialism of the Franklin Pierce administration lives on as the romantic, elite legend of the Eastern Establishment. They celebrate that legend in the marriage of President Pierce's blood relative Barbara Pierce to George Bush, whose imperial ideas are rooted in the events of the 1850s.)

Led by Quitman and his allies in the lower South, the Knights of the Golden Circle formed the heart of the secession military machine as the crisis of the Union deepened. But John Quitman died in July 1858. The Scottish Rite leadership was then totally reorganized. Albert Pike was brought into the Supreme Council and, in 1859, Pike was elevated to Commander of the Southern Jurisdiction. While the Knights of the Golden Circle intensified their terrorist activities in Texas, and their "filibuster" raids into Mexico and Central America, Albert Pike pulled together the inner core of a revolutionary government for the U.S. southern states.

As Albert Pike said himself, Pike had not even heard of the Scottish Rite until 1853. Sponsored by his fellow Bostonian, Attorney General Caleb Cushing, who inserted Pike's cronies into office for him in the 1840s, Pike had become the boss of Arkansas politics. He had proven his "Southernness" by running racial hysteria campaigns against Arkansas's handful of freed blacks and against America's Catholic immigrants.

Joining Pike's new Scottish Rite Supreme Council in 1859 was the U.S. vice president, John C. Breckinridge of Kentucky. He would soon run for President on a secession platform, his campaign managed by Caleb Cushing. In March 1860, the U.S. treasury secretary, Howell Cobb, joined Pike's Supreme Council. (Cobb was a ruler of the Georgia Masonic mafia with Robert Toombs and James Bulloch.) If you are going to lead a revolt against a government, it is handy to have the head of that government's treasury take charge of your finances, as Cobb did for his Masonic boss Albert Pike.

Cobb resigned his treasury post in December 1860, following Abraham Lincoln's election to the U.S. presidency. Two months later, Cobb was president of the convention in Alabama, which created the Confederate government and broke up the United States. Cobb's name appears at the top of signers of the Confederate Constitution, a document which Cobb and Albert Pike are supposed to have drafted together.

The Responsibility of the Reporter and the Political Analyst and How to Tell the Difference

by Joffre Stewart

An-archism: A social philosophy that rejects authoritarian government and maintains that voluntary institutions are best suited to express man's natural social tendencies.

—George Woodcock

Mr. Stewart reports that this is part of a presentation given "at the Chicago regional gathering of the International Black Writers Conference (PO Box 1030, Chicago, IL 60690) on Soweto [Walkathon Satur-] Day in the 500th year marking the depopulation of the Americas by the diseased monotheistic barbarisms of Europe..."

If journalism schools don't train students to be operationally stupid, then maybe the admitted students arrive with no real need to be trained for a blunting of their sense of social responsibility. If the raw material of journalism is predisposed by status quo animus to be stupid and insensitive to social responsibility, then the school training may merely be icing on the cake. Political analysts can be drawn from this pool. I know a former student, Don Justine Terry, who sat at classes at the Medill School of Journalism. Terry has an ex-Communist father, an-archist mother, and Republican brother. His own choice resembles liberal; not an ignorant choice, but an examined and informed choice. He hardly knew he was black until he went to Oberlin College. At Medill, he found his classmates difficult, almost impossible to talk to. Conversations were by way of argument and disagreement.

The Institutional Stupidity of the Media cultivates media-stupefaction of the Masses, whether it stems from the Standard Operating Procedures of newsgatherers, the initial moral poverty of journalism trainees, or the board room control of Dr. Strangelove (Henry Kissinger), Daddy Warbucks (Warburg), and Masonic hierarchs. This stupidity is evident in the media treatment of LA Riots, Part II, where the non-function of Rodney King batterers at the inception of the riot—which allowed white T-shirted provocateurs to ignite fires and spark the looting—is consistently portrayed as honest accident, incompetence, or underreaction rather than as a calculated conspiracy by Chief Gates and George Bush. This results in mystification for those who don't know how to read Bush's lips and results in status quo-stabilizing noninterference in the conspiratorial process. The movies give us our image of the socially responsible reporter. Either the editor gives him—it's usually a him—his assignment or the assignment finds him, and with no weapon but his trusty typewriter, justice (more likely criminal than social) is done. This is a fiction that slights the fact that in the bureaucratic organization of labor, the editor, the reporter's supervisor, is there to block socially-sensitive reports that the reporter might submit. In the 1960s, Karl Meyer, A. J. Muste and other pacifists went into South Vietnam and demonstrated against the war. Reporters did their job and sent the story home, and editors did their job by killing it. Likewise, at the time of the Gulf War, NBC News fired a reporter because he brought back news of the war. (As I've indicated, people like Dr. Strangelove (Kissinger) sit on corporate boards that control the likes of NBC.)

The journalistic profession is organized against the expression of significant social responsibility, or anything that might look like it. It's easy to imagine that some of the bombing of Baghdad was aimed more at killing CNN's Peter Arnett than Saddam Hussein. It can be useless merely being a reporter. One Sunday, probably in the 1960s, I remarked to one Ted Heil about something in the headlines. Ted stared at me a moment, then said he didn't read the papers. Ted had been with the Navy, March 1, 1954, when the MAD BOMBERS exploded the Hydrogen BOMB at Bikini, which resulted in the death of Aikichi Kuboyama on a Japanese fishing vessel. Heil understood that it was a cobalt bomb, a designedly dirty BOMB. No paper or magazine told the truth about this BOMB test. So Heil stopped reading them... I went through WWII without ever, to my certain knowledge, hearing a shot fired in anger. In October, 1950, I saw a cop kill a man at 48th and South Parkway (Now King Drive). The cop's visage was not unfamiliar. I might have passed him in the halls at high school. I rarely buy a paper, but this time I thought I would, in order to compare their account with what I actually saw. I went over every column inch in the Chicago Defender two or three times looking for the front page story which was not there. I felt gyped. The Defender was covering up a case of police abuse. A friend of mine refuses to buy the Defender, because (and I think this applies to all black papers) they were once trying to get him killed. He was with the army in Italy in WW II while the Defender was agitating for black servicemen to be given combat duty. It's impossible for me to say my friend is wrong, because a socially responsible paper would be anti-war and would not be agitating to get blacks or anyone else killed out of some patriotic loyalty to integration. A socially responsible political analyst or reporter must oppose the policy of papers like the Defender, which could mean not having a job. Which brings me to why I am glad I don't have a job.

Noam Chomsky, who reads the New York Times religiously, has said that the New York Times is the most corrupt paper in America. It, in sync with other papers, helped to make Ed Koch, a Zionist, mayor of New York, by denying coverage to a black candidate. The history of the Times helps explain some of this. At the end of the last century, the Times went through various changes in ownership. Suddenly, one of these new owners found he had no advertising, as Jewish store owners were boycotting the paper. And that's how it stayed until it got Jewish ownership. I have another friend who works for the Times and who shall remain nameless because he is afraid I might cause him to lose his job. I don't think he's ever reacted one way or the other to the Chomsky statement. Currently, he is in the Chicago bureau of the Times and doesn't want me, a Chicagoan, to seek coverage for any of the local anti-Apartheid pickets, demonstrations against the Anglo-American WASP-Jewish Ruling Class dictatorship in Guatemala, or pro-Palestinian solidarity activities, because my doing so might cost him his job. He once explained that 60% of his assignments are determined by the New York office, 40% he can suggest, subject to approval by New York. On hearing this, I never felt so glad not to have a job, and particularly not to have a prestigious, well-paying job in journalism. My friend-who-shall-remain-nameless seems to be saying that his first responsibility is keeping his job, not losing it in some socially responsible way.

But if the journalist has a responsibility to be honest, which is as much an admirably selfish responsibility to one's self as to society, then even a conventional, no-radical-ax-to-grind journalist might lose life and job simultaneously. A professional, well-connected journalist who lucks into a chance to be honest can be more at risk than an amateur journalist who blabs all: Jessica Savich saw the rifle that shot Ronald Reagan, in March 1981, and so her murder was carried out, and faked as a road accident. [Editor's Note: Shortly before her death, newswoman Savich had produced an incredible expose of the Italian Masonic/Fascist group P2 for the PBS show Frontline, and some believe that this was the reason she was killed.] In December, 1972, Michelle Clarke, a WBBM-CBS reporter who was getting information from Dorothy Hunt, wife of Watergate burglar and possible Grassy Knoll man E. Howard Hunt, was murdered [along with the other passengers] in the crash of a United Airlines flight at Midway airport in Chicago. [See PARANOIA Issue 5.] The hitman lived to admit his role to one of Sherman Skolnick's investigators. Just so one could not fully determine how or when Clarke was murdered, her employer, CBS, had the body burned before even her parents could get to it. This should be no surprise inasmuch as CBS, which gave Dan Rather an 8 million dollar contract as a payoff for helping Dorothy Hunt's CIA-connected husband kill Kennedy, was a CIA front at the time. In the 1980s, when CBS laid off many workers, it was because then-Director of the CIA William Casey had shifted the CIA subsidy from CBS to ABC, in which Casey had invested some of his own money. Casey conveniently died while on his way to testify at an Iran-Contra hearing, so I'm not certain which broadcast network is the CIA's favorite today. Maybe they all are.

According to Sherman Skolnick, WMAW-NBC radio reporter Ted Smart was getting close to who shot John Kennedy and Martin Luther King when he was murdered in Belmont Harbor on a 1970s Fourth of July. A Chicago Tribune reporter named Tucker put an accidental-drowning spin on the story. It goes without saying that political analysts and reporters "on duty" for the CIA are essentially inimical to social responsibility in journalism. The government (CIA) is more dangerous to journalists than the Mafia, per se. The CIA may hire the Mafia, but both Mafiosi and journalists are in more danger from government (CIA) than journalists are from Mafiosi. Government is the mega-criminal organization and the an-archist solution is to abolish it absolutely and permanently, precipitating the terminal ruin of the Anglo-American WASP-Jewish Ruling Class. No cops, no courts, no jails, no taxes.

The journalistic profession is organized against the expression of significant social responsibility, or anything that might look like it. It is easy to imagine that some of the bombing of Baghdad was aimed more at killing CNN's Peter Arnett than Saddam Hussein.

"Dr. Strangelove"

MACHIAVELLI AND THE AGE OF IMAGE PROPAGANDA

Part I

by Mark Weston

Niccolo Machiavelli was born in Florence, Italy, in 1469. Raised during a period of great political intrigue and personal danger, his environment instilled in him an appreciation for the art of social manipulation on a grand scale.

By insinuating himself into the Courts of the more powerful Potentates of the day, he managed to achieve the exalted position of Secretary to the Second Chancery of the Republic of Florence, thus controlling the Republic's military and foreign affairs. His fortunes took a turn for the worse thirteen years later when a change in the power structure forced him into exile. It was during this unhappy period of peasant labor that he penned his famous tome The Prince, thus assuring that his very name would become synonymous with the darker aspect of political expediency.

Even now, as the world readies itself for the headlong plunge into a new millennium, his musings touch the fetid little hearts of those who dream longingly of unmitigated State power. The author Christian Gaus, in fact, clearly states in his introduction to the 1953 Mentor edition of The Prince that "Machiavelli has repeatedly been hailed as the founder of modern Political Science."

Pragmatism vilified...

"A man who wishes to make a profession of goodness in everything must necessarily come to grief among so many who are not good. Therefore, it is necessary...to learn how not to be good, and to use this knowledge and not use it, according to the necessity of the case."

-Machiavelli

Although our pragmatic side may agree with the above, we tend to shun the moral dilemma that it entails. We Americans are brought up to be romantic idealists, firmly believing, and ready to die for, "truth, justice and the American way." Pragmatism, being antithetical to romance, is thus viewed as ethical pornography. Ironically, this romanticized world view is responsible for much of the misery that the world has been subjected to throughout history. This is because this romantic ideal is presented to the American psyche by people who don't believe a word of it. Wolves in sheep's clothing as it were.

Our romantic education begins when we are children, taught the purely religious ideals of "good" and "evil." Far from the real world of genuine human dynamics, we are presented with a black and white fantasy of "God" and "Satan." As children, it is easier to regard events as intrinsically "good" or "bad." As we age, though, the blacks and whites tend to merge into varying shades of gray. This situation can be the cause of a certain amount of turmoil in the more romantic mindset. To the degree where the most minor infractions of the moral code, such as a "white lie," can create in us a dilemma which we dare not gaze at for fear of losing our romantic ideal of a "soul" to the Medusa of critical thought. In this regard, the realization that "goodness" is a purely subjective concept, supported by nothing more solid than "faith," can be equivalent to the death of Santa Claus.

It is for this reason that the so-called "religious right" is so easily manipulated into believing that outside forces, (i.e. God/Satan), are at work in the world. If these Christian zealots truly had "eyes that see and ears that hear," then the real enemy would be readily apparent. The Emperor has no clothes, so he drapes himself with collar and vestment.

Later in life, the educational system attempts to instill in the student the concept of altruism, or the unselfish regard for the welfare of others. While this is a fine concept as it applies to one's family and loved ones, it only works on a societal level when practiced by all members of the community. And there's the rub. Pragmatic manipulators are all too aware of the fact that altruism is nothing more than a castle made of sand. Altruism begins with politeness, which can either be promoted by the media to build bridges between disparate groups, or disparaged by the same to build social barriers.

Later still, when the hapless citizen joins the work force, he is expected to live up to some amorphous Judeo-Christian work ethic. This sector of the moral code is considered necessary as it regards getting people to labor. On their own, people will figure out just how much labor is really needed to produce the quantity of goods which are really needed. This "ethic" is useful in fostering a consumer society where workers are encouraged to produce far more than they need, in exchange for currency which they can then spend on products that they don't really need which in turn forces them into debt which in turn enslaves them to their job. Purely obsessive/compulsive behavior which has been legitimized by the collective gestalt. It isn't really our fault though. The age-old axiom of "garbage in, garbage out" truly holds sway in this case. The "garbage" in this case being provided by network television in the form of the "buy this -eat this" message that it constantly hammers home. The world on the tube leaves little room for any real lifestyle alternatives.

To summarize, the manipulative pragmatist, while following his own code, promotes a popular mythology to foster a fear of non-compliance among the general populace. This mythology includes the following major points:

- A big father god exists in the heavens. While this god loves his children, he is also a strict disciplinarian. Meeting with his disapproval equates to soul death.

It must have been reassuring for the average grunt to fly home on leave and be mesmerized by the image of that philosophical juggernaut John Wayne. He always made you proud to be an American. Maybe the Duke didn't always understand the orders that his superiors expected him to follow, but damnit, follow he did.

- The well being of the community is paramount. You are a mere cog in the machine. To give your life for others (i.e. the State), is the highest ideal.

- Work hard to produce products which then can be purchased for currency. Lack of gainful employment puts you at risk of being considered a vagrant "slacker." Keep in mind that you are what you do. This is the first thing that strangers will ask you when you meet them in a social setting.

World War Two: The Grand Experiment

"A prince should therefore have no other aim or thought, nor take up any other thing for his study, but war and its organization and its discipline, for that is the only art and that is necessary to one who commands, and it is of such virtue that it not only maintains those who are born princes, but often enables men of private fortune to attain to that rank."

-Machiavelli

Although the societal structures mentioned above have been in place, in one form or another, since the beginning of time, only since the end of World War Two have they been employed with such dehumanizing efficiency. The popular zeitgeist has now been perfected to the point where the message, though still an undercurrent, is implicit: obey, consume and die.

The Second World War was fought not so much for political idealism as it was for purely pragmatic reasons. The reality of the situation surely would have surprised the average Joe who signed up to fight a war because of his patriotic convictions. "Our boys" were shipped off to battle by a gang of big business Fat Cats who were gleefully reaping large profits by supplying both sides in the conflict. And the band played on. The "band" in this case was located in Hollywood, California. The movies were a cheap entertainment that kept the propaganda machine going full steam ahead. Mr. and Mrs. America couldn't be blamed for the fear they felt as they watched the giant screen light up with images of "Jap" soldiers invading San Francisco. Although highly unlikely, the public was regaled with such gory spectacles, replete with bloodthirsty "Nips" bayoneting babies. The reason that this Capitocracy was so adept at leading the buying public like a lamb to slaughter was because Hollywood was such a willing accomplice.

When the war was finally called off after successful field tests of that newest of infernal devices, the Atomic Bomb, Hollywood lost much of its power to the new spectacle of television, which was eagerly accepted as proof of the superiority of the American Way. Televisions are now a central piece of furniture in virtually every home in the country. Television has thus become BIG BUSINESS. T.V. news, in combination with opinion polls, has become the hammer and anvil employed to shape the soft and malleable American psyche.

The 50's: The Life of Riley

"And one sees...that when princes think more of luxury than of arms, they lose their state. The chief cause of the loss of states, is the contempt of this art (war), and the way to acquire them is to be well versed in the same."

-Machiavelli

We can see in Machiavelli's words a warning to the "princes" of the world not to get too comfortable. The powers that be wasted little time in promoting yet another conflict, this time with a conglomerate of third world countries known as the Soviet Union.

This was the decade when most American families went out and bought their first idiot box. Although we were already embroiled in yet another war (Korea this time) the movies were dishing out repeated doses of a glorified World War Two. This was done because the soldiers returning from Korea were a bit confused as to their actual role in the wacky world of domino theory. They didn't have the luxury of black and white issues such as those involved in what Studs Terkel termed "the Good War." It must have been reassuring for the average grunt to fly home on leave and be mesmerized by the image of that philosophical juggernaut John Wayne. He always made you proud to be an American. Maybe the Duke didn't always understand the orders that his superiors expected him to follow, but damnit, follow he did.

Unbeknownst to the general populace however, dedicated men were hard at work in our nation's clandestine think-tanks. They saw what was accepted as gospel and duly noted how that message was presented. All of this feedback was entered into computers to be distilled down into even more efficient sound bites. It would never suffice to simply hang giant posters on the stadium walls. This was not China. No, virtue and hard work could be extolled in more subtle, and as history has proven, more effective ways. Subtlety was key. If we were to have an American Obermensch, he would have to be sold on the idea that he invented himself. The stage was set for the next experiment.

In the next issue of PARANOIA we'll don our "granny glasses" and take a magic carpet ride into the 60's, double-knit our way through the 70's, and bust the bank in the 80's, finally crash landing in the midst of a fin de siècle.

The UFO Wild Card

An interview with George Andrews by Joan D'Arc

George, I regard your book Extra-terrestrial Friends and Foes as one of the best books written on the extra-terrestrial dilemma. Can you tell me what led to your interest in ETs?

I decided to dedicate myself to UFO research after I saw a metallic disc perform in ways no aircraft known to me could perform (going from high speed to a dead stop in a split second, hovering for several minutes, then going instantly from dead stop to very high speed) on a farm near Carmarthen in Wales in 1972. Previous to this, my research and my books had been entirely focused on various aspects of psychoactive drugs.

It is interesting that I was at work on a book entitled Drugs and Magic at the time that the sighting occurred. This sighting was a landmark event that changed the direction of my research. Since that incident, the primary focus of my research has been UFO phenomena, paying particular attention to what may at first seem marginal or peripheral aspects previously neglected by other researchers, making use of knowledge acquired during my previous cycle of research. Although it is not always the case, the high strangeness factor in UFO research that is so baffling to the conventional academic mentality may be more comprehensible to a seasoned veteran of the psychedelic experience.

Why have you chosen to dedicate yourself to this research and what do you hope to achieve?

As stated at the beginning of Extra-terrestrials Among Us, I seek to bridge the gap in understanding between the children of the Earth and the children of the stars, to prepare the way for mutually beneficial communication instead of disastrous antagonistic confrontation, to renew the alliance that existed in deep antiquity as we cross the threshold of the Space Age. In order to do this, it is essential that we learn to distinguish between friend and foe, between those whose motivation for interacting with us is predatory and those whose presence here is compatible with human well-being.

Is there a sense of urgency in the publication of your books?

The most urgent priority in the present situation seems to be to achieve public repudiation, on a scale so large it constitutes a clear majority, of the secret and illegal treaty made between representatives of our government and the Grays. This would clear the way for an alliance more positive in nature, such as with the Tau Ceti group and/or one or more of the Blond groups. The reason for the urgency is that our survival as a species depends on our ability to make a correct decision in this matter.

In ET Friends and Foes you describe the distinct differences between the extraterrestrials known as the Blonds and the big-headed type known as the Grays, with reference to where they come from, the history of their planet and why they are here. How have you come upon this amazing information?

My source of information for the characteristics of the different types of ETs has been mainly descriptions of experiences reported by abductees I have encountered. I would be the first to admit that I do not have any formal proof or even substantial evidence of the existence of these different types of aliens, beyond what abductees and other witnesses have reported. I have no conscious memory of ever having seen an alien myself, though I have definitely seen UFOs.

It was in correlating information from different abductees that I began discerning patterns in the types of behavior reported involving the entities responsible for the abductions. I decided to fit together the pieces of the puzzle that had come my way, and put them out in the open for public examination, my book being the means of doing this. There are many researchers who each have some different pieces of the puzzle; I don't think any researcher has access to all the pieces of the puzzle. It is only by sharing our findings that the big picture can emerge.

What is wrong with the attitude that they are "peaceful" space brothers?

The only thing wrong with the assumption that all types of ETs are peaceful space brothers is that it is contradicted over and over again by the abductee reports. The cattle mutilations are also an alarm signal! We must deal with this as a reality in the here and now, rather than as a comforting playland fantasy, which is tantamount to suicide when confronted with predatory entities camouflaged as benevolent.

In your estimation, is it possible that Earthling elite power groups have invented the "alien" as a common enemy by utilizing secret mind control techniques such as brain implants, to make us believe we are being visited from another world?

This is a possibility that should be explored impartially like any other. However, who then was responsible for the brain implant in the case of Dr. Torralba in 16th Century Spain, recorded in the literature of that period? How come not only Dr. Torralba but many others saw El Rubio as a physically real entity, human in appearance?

I think a small percentage of the abductions are indeed mind control experiments by Earthling elite power groups, designed to confuse and distract independent researchers, but there is no way this could provide a satisfactory explanation for the entire range of phenomena or even a majority of the cases. The abductees have too many supporting witnesses that something physically real actually happened.

Of course Big Brother would love nothing better than to unite us all under his command to defend ourselves against an imaginary alien threat. However, the ships and entities reported are not products of the imagination, and can be ignored only at our own risk. Products of the imagination do not leave behind landing traces, or bovine carcasses mutilated in the field with far greater precision and speed than would be possible for our best veterinarians operating under laboratory conditions.

In your estimation, just how serious is the extraterrestrial problem? If there are in fact more missing persons than governments dare to disclose to the public, what is the worst case scenario you might suggest?

In my opinion, the extra-terrestrial problem is as serious as any problem can get, since what is at stake is our survival as a freely evolving species. If we don't wake up to what is going on and take resolute action, we will be a slave species used as a reservoir of vital fluids and organic spare parts by the Gray group our government made a secret and illegal treaty with. That is the worst case scenario.

Do you think Earthlings are being "harvested" in any manner?

Yes, I think Earthlings are being harvested both directly and indirectly in a multitude of different ways, physically, emotionally, mentally and even spiritually. The way to escape this is to develop multidimensional awareness, which makes one far more difficult to manipulate.

Are these alien groups, or some other "higher evolved" group, possibly responsible for putting humans on this planet at some earlier time?

The record left in the Pre-Cambrian and Cambrian rocks is clear. The basic life-forms from which the more highly developed life-forms later evolved appeared in the primeval ocean at about the same time, for the most part fully formed with no trace of intermediary stages of development, exactly as if they had been deposited in the ocean by entities from elsewhere. I think life was seeded on this planet by extra-terrestrials, but that does not give them the right to treat us as their property or their slaves.

So Earthling abductions by UFO occupants can be seen as periodic DNA testing and modification?

I think that abductions by UFO occupants can be seen to be at least partially for the purpose of DNA monitoring and modification. A group of ETs seeded the primeval ocean with the ancestors of our flora and fauna, and ourselves, and may have now returned for the harvest, but our awareness has developed to the point that they no longer have the right to use us as slaves or as a food source.

What is behind the impregnation of women by alien beings and the taking of the fetus/hybrid? Is it explained by the "dying race" scenario? How would you explain the subterranean "farms" which grow these hybrids in liquid? How do we know this is not a collective nightmare?

I wish the subterranean farms growing hybrid fetuses were a collective nightmare, but unfortunately it looks to me as if the nightmare is for real. There are far too many women reporting missing fetuses that had previously been medically determined to be present, with neither the doctor nor the patient able to explain how the fetus suddenly disappeared without a trace. That is a nightmare in broad daylight. They are so ruthless in their procedures because the dying race scenario is for real. My opinion is that harvesting of emotions is a secondary factor of much lower priority, and far less urgent.

How have your views changed and what new theories have you developed since you wrote Extraterrestrials Among Us?

A lot of new information has come in since the publication of ETs Among Us, but none of it is of a nature that would oblige me to make fundamental changes in my theories. The new information that has come in tends rather to confirm the accuracy of the statements made in both of my books, with one exception, which is this. Since

Those who now so smugly giggle or guffaw at the mention of UFO phenomena are the ones who will be most vulnerable to paralyzing panic, when all at once the whole world sees fleets of UFOs in the sky and mass landings begin.

the book came out, several abductees have told me that I was mistaken to assume that all Grays are predatory foes. They say that there are different groups of Grays that operate independently of each other, sometimes in rivalry with each other. Apparently, they may not be all linked up to the same superbrain. If this turns out to be true, I would be glad to admit my mistake. However, at present we have no way to confirm or invalidate this information.

What's the most fascinating new development you've come across?

One intriguing theory proposed to me recently is that the aliens performing the abductions were actually made in the USA, and cloned in the vats on the lower levels in the Dulce base [New Mexico]. Furthermore, they are under the control of the US government, which plans to stage a fake invasion from outer space so the citizens of this country will accept the State of Emergency and Martial Law. The theory is interesting but in my opinion unlikely.

Are you ever threatened by anyone who does not want this information public?

So far the people who do not want this information made public have not gone beyond verbal insults, but I must say that when I wake up each morning, I am pleasantly surprised to find myself still alive! As I see it, my margin of safety lies in the fact that I have written so extensively, and have found enthusiastic readers all around the world, that if they were to arrange an "accident" or "strange suicide" for me, it would be interpreted world-wide as instant confirmation of the truth of my controversial and debatable ideas.

It will soon be 2000 years since Jesus walked the Earth. Is there something special in store for Earth peoples as we near the year 2000?

It would be presumptuous of me to attempt to prophesy what will happen in the year 2000, when I don't even know what will be happening an hour from now. I can say that the present situation is apocalyptic in many respects.

We are in the final stages of irrevocably destroying our own planet's biosphere, in order that a few very wealthy men can become even wealthier. It bears repeating that Mother Earth is our star, and is the only one we have. This potential suicide of our species intimately and legitimately concerns every single human being on the planet.

Our civilization is crumbling before our very eyes. New York has become like Bombay, its streets clogged with the myriads of desperate starving homeless. Our politicians of both parties are sold out to the corporations that fund them through Political Action Committees. Despite the cosmetic change in administration, they continue to pass laws which make the rich get richer and the poor get poorer, concentrating the planet's wealth into fewer and fewer hands, thereby guaranteeing a permanence of turmoil, misery and war. The democracy we inherited from our forefathers is being systematically replaced by totalitarian despotism, which our government officials at the highest levels are conniving to bring about. Nearly everyone is going bankrupt except the stockholders who own the Federal Reserve and the World Bank.

This tiny clique may have made the fatal mistake of succeeding too soon and too well with their plans, since the enormous and ever-increasing disparity between the luxurious surroundings in which they spend their lives and the conditions under which the average citizen must live are becoming far too obvious to far too many people all at once, thereby paving the way for sudden revolutionary change. In no matter what direction one looks, the comforting facade of business as usual is bursting at the seams or already cracked wide open. All the signs indicate that we are living in the final days of a major cycle in history.

Do you correlate this at all with the growing numbers of UFO abductions and contact?

The Christian tradition predicts the Second Coming and Judgement Day. The Hopi tradition predicts Purification Day. The Islamic tradition predicts the coming of the Mahdi and the Day of Fire. The Jews are expecting the Messiah. The Buddhists are awaiting the arrival of Maitreya, the new Buddha for the new world cycle. If you put all that together, and then add the wild card in the game, which is extra-terrestrial and other-dimensional intervention in human affairs (the UFO factor), it is obvious that the period we are entering is not going to be one of business as usual.

It is also obvious that those who cling to the concept that business as usual is going to continue indefinitely are likely to be among the first casualties. Those who now so smugly giggle or guffaw at the mention of UFO phenomena are the ones who will be most vulnerable to paralyzing panic, when all at once the whole world sees fleets of UFOs in the sky and mass landings begin. It looks to me as if an event of this nature is what all these decades of hide and seek games have been building up to. I know this has been predicted semi-annually for the last fifty years and has never yet happened, but this does not mean it never will happen. When one considers what has been going on during recent years in UFO hot spots like Belgium, Mexico City, Gulf Breeze, Texarkana, Virginia and many other places, the trend developing and where it will lead becomes quite obvious.

George, what would you say in response to Catholics who are upset with your analysis of Virgin Mary sightings as "extraterrestrial scams" [as reported in PARANOIA Issue 5]?

I think that the way you treated the apparitions of the Virgin was excellent, and the way you credited me was appropriate. I hope with all my heart that the aliens responsible for the cultural conditioning we know as Christianity wish to share this planet peacefully with us, themselves living up to the ethical standards of the religion they have promulgated. However, many of the experiences being reported by abductees do not correlate with this type of benign intervention. These cases consistently appear to indicate that at least one group of aliens intends to replace humanity as the dominant species on this planet, rather than to peacefully share our living space. It is of the utmost importance to explore as thoroughly as possible these contradictions between the religious doctrines supposedly promulgated by ETs and the actual behavior of ETs being reported by abductees. If what we are confronted with is different groups of aliens with extensive camouflage capabilities, who have been involved in a "war in heaven" since deep antiquity, it is literally a matter of life and death for us to distinguish what is genuine from what is imitation. It should be realized that just because there are imitations, this does not necessarily mean that there is no true Virgin Mary. We must learn to distinguish the real thing from the imitation, as we must distinguish our ET friends from our ET foes.*

Earlier this year, constitutional Attorney Linda D. Thompson, Chairman of the American Justice Federation in Indianapolis, Indiana created quite a stir with her call for the formation of citizens' militias, and her plan to conduct a uniformed and armed militia march into Washington on September 19, 1994 to arrest every member of Congress for treason. Thompson's group had delivered an ultimatum to each member of Congress, giving them a chance to rethink their allegiance.

Linda Thompson

Essentially, she asked them: Do you answer to We the People, or to the international banking/corporate regime that has become the American government?

slams her

Those who answered incorrectly, warned Thompson, would hang by the lamp posts in Washington, D.C. Thompson subsequently received much criticism, some based on hostility, some on simple concern. As the last issue of PARANOIA went to press, Thompson called off the march. At that time, we called Thompson's actions ## critics.

back-peddling-cry-baby

"part of an intelligent tactical maneuver against the forces of the NWO." However, one of our letter-writers was quite critical. Now, in the interest of fairness, we are publishing Thompson's own reasons for the planning and subsequent calling off of the march, as well as her response to her critics.

Date: 09-Aug-94 04:48 From: Linda Thompson To: All Subj: SEPT. 19 MILITIA ASSEMBLY CANCELED

The September 19th militia assembly in Washington, D.C. is OFF for several tactical reasons, the first and foremost being that the reason for calling it at all was itself tactical. Many militia commanders are well aware of this and have been since the inception of the assembly. So what's the deal?

There was no one in the country effectively calling attention to the problems we are facing and at the same time, offering a solution to the problem that would actually work, or any solution other than "write your congressman" or "vote them out." Why? Because to propose any actual solution kills the "cash cow" that so many of these "information sources" thrive on. Secondly, it invites public ridicule — most of it from those who don't want their cash cow cut off, but also, from all the lame, lazy and cowardly who MUST find a way to attack anyone actually doing something so they don't look like the lame, lazy, cowards they are! It is guaranteed to invite media ridicule (due to the control of the media and how the media is used to sway public opinion); and most of us already rightly fear and are well aware of the direct attacks that will be made by the feds, via the IRS and other harassment.

Additionally, few people seemed to be able to even RECOGNIZE the fact that the MILITIA IS a CONSTITUTIONAL and wholly legitimate method for ridding ourselves of tyranny. The obvious "solutions" such as "writing our congressman" or "vote them out" are just simply dead issues that make people yawn and change the channel. Even people who don't know what is going on, recognize that these measures are futile. At some gut level, we all know this doesn't work. We may not know why. But suddenly, here's someone offering something most people didn't even know existed — our "educational" system has seen to that, but they remembered enough about their Constitution to recognize truth when they saw it. Their interest was awakened when they realized that — hey, wait a sec, this might actually work!

The result achieved from calling the militia assembly in Waco were immediate and nation-wide. First and foremost, came the attacks on me: "Who does she think she is, calling herself the 'Adjutant General' of the militia!" Why, how pleasant of each of YOU to volunteer for the job, dear fellows. Oh, you didn't?

Well, perhaps you'd like to discuss exactly "what is the militia" before you cry "it's not legal!!" "You'll be indicted for sedition!!", etc. ad nauseum, as well as publicly debate how assembling for an armed, peaceful demonstration in Waco was going to "get us all killed." was "playing into the hands of the NWO," — all the same garbage I also heard about the Sept. 19 march. Plenty of radio stations interviewed me, motivated solely by their desire to publicly ridicule me and make a spectacle of me, only to discover it backfired, because the Constitution, and the law, were behind me. Their programs woke up a lot of people.

All of this public debate, first of all, served to identify the whiners, liars, cowards and thieves, but more importantly, proved to be the SINGLE FASTEST, MOST EFFECTIVE method of getting a lot of information out to the public, while at the same time, actually getting people to pay attention.

The radio would hype it up in advance — "Wait'll this dumb broad with her dumb ideas gets on here! We'll tell her a thing or two." Many have been the sorry announcers who got their butts kicked up one side and down the other with the law and the Constitution, as their listeners eagerly picked up the ball and ran with it! Two U.S. Attorneys discovered to their own chagrin, that, son-of-a-gun, the militia assembly was absolutely, surprise, legal. What vindication, when they could not indict me, though they tried, for calling the militia assembly in Waco — and more publicity, too, that helped even MORE people find out what "this militia thing" is all about.

Would it have worked as well if someone, particularly a woman, had not been willing to play the role of "dumb broad," proposing an "outrageous" idea, to be publicly ridiculed?

Once people were paying attention, they listened to the problems AND the solutions. Suddenly, instead of 50 years of whining from the Birchers and tuning out the din, they were, many for the first time, HEARING the problems AND they also quickly realized that there really WAS an alternative, legitimate solution that just might work, besides the lame "write your congressman" or "vote them out" that all of us know is a waste of time.

The 2nd Amendment became something more than just a useless line in a document most of them had heard of but never read. Suddenly, they were whipping out copies of their pocket Constitutions — shoving them on their friends, explaining this "militia" thing to them. And jury rights, too! And finding out about how the courts work, how to unrig the rigged systems — whoa, all of a sudden, "We the People," began to take its original shape. It is, after all, WE, THE RIGHTFUL MASTERS, OF BOTH THE CONGRESS AND THE COURTS.

The NRA, for all of its millions of dollars and so-called "lobbying power" was exposed as the impotent, government-controlled lame horse that it is, doing nothing but misleading people into believing the NRA would "save their rights," deceiving people into giving up the fight themselves.

Preserving our liberties is a duty that cannot be delegated. It requires vigilance. If we can be tricked into believing that someone else will fight for our liberties, when we cannot or will not fight for ourselves, then the battle is already lost. This was one of the very reasons the NRA was such an effective tool for those who have stripped us of the present ability to exercise our rights.

But no one can take our rights from us against our will. Our rights are God given. Preserving the ability to exercise these rights is the very purpose of the militia and the need for the militia is why the right of We, The People to keep and bear arms is absolute and inviolate.

In the process of writing the ultimatum, the problems were identified, and in such a way that not even my detractors could disagree. Thus, it was impossible for ANYONE to attack me or the ultimatum, without (first, and this was hilarious to watch) AGREEING with every point in the Ultimatum. This forced the fed propaganda operatives, as well as the "pay patriots" into my corner, whether they wanted to be there or not. Many were literally stealing our information and publishing it, while simultaneously denouncing me. It was sad to see that some people were duped by this tactic and embraced these sources of information — coming from our work and research — used by mongrel dogs to gain credibility for themselves, but they were easy to detect.

For at the same time they used our work and agreed with the positions set forth in my writings, they were left scrambling to achieve some shred of credibility after they would then turn around and attack me, personally, with or willing to back up what they claim, this was it. The back-peddling-crybabies and outright liars, are not friends nor patriots. They are selling us out and serving only to lull people into the false belief that "someone else" is "taking care of the problem" or that false solutions, such as "writing our congressmen," will do the trick, keeping us busy, so we do nothing at all, all the while, feeding THEIR cash cow.

By calling for the militia assembly, the following has been accomplished:

(1) In the process of publicly ridiculing me, radios, televisions, newsletters, magazines, etc. had to give publicity to the entire issue, i.e. the Ultimatum (what it says) — with which EVERYONE agrees; next, exactly WHAT it is I called for as a solution: An armed assembly of militia units, thereby giving exposure to: What, exactly, is "the militia," is an "armed assembly legal" (of course it is — look at the 1st and 2nd Amendments), thereby raising the consciousness of hundreds of thousands of people to what is a BASIC and PROTECTED RIGHT in this country that many were unaware of.

(2) In the process of such pathetic ravings, some of which were nothing more than, "She's just a woman, pay no attention," to outright lies, such as the claim that I ran for governor of Illinois on the Socialist party ticket, as was put out by Mike Dillon, the Orlando Sentinel, and others. Could they attack what I said? Of course not. It is the truth. The call for a militia assembly to arrest Congressmen has, in that regard, been the best little snake catcher, ever. If you needed a barometer of who was able publicly ridiculing me, people who "had a better idea of what to do with a militia" had to first FORM a militia. Leaders began to lead and militia units appeared where none had ever existed before — hundreds of units — and those already in existence, tripled their numbers.

(3) In the process of trying to talk me out of the "tactically stupid" march on D.C., all these units had to come up with their own, better plan, to propose — and they did.

(4) In the process of preparing for either their own plan or the Sept. 19 assembly, militia units TRAINED, RECRUITED, STOCKPILED WEAPONS, AMMO, FOOD, AND MEDICAL GEAR, arranged safe houses, and actually GOT PREPARED.

Until now, many would say, "Hey, when they come to MY door, I'll be waiting." Big whoop. When there's 50 of them and 1 of you, you are going to die, period, end of subject. But until now, a better alternative hadn't been suggested.

Has anything, in the history of this country, since the Revolutionary War, accomplished this much towards actually solving our current problems, mobilized so many, so quickly or so effectively, or done so much to literally scare the absolute bejeebers out of the opposition, as the public announcement, by a dumpy broad in Indianapolis, that, enough is enough, we are going to arrest the traitors, man the weapons?

The call for the militia and the resulting mobilization that has occurred ALSO forced THE OPPOSITION to reveal several tactical deficiencies on THEIR side.

The most REVEALING, OBVIOUS and GLARING deficiency, on heir side, that was exposed through the course of public debate of this "dumb idea" is that they CANNOT PUT DOWN A LARGE GROUP OF PEOPLE, period.

They do NOT have the ability — they lack the sheer numbers in manpower, and the training, and they have stretched their assets too many places. Additionally, they ARE NOT SURE (and rightfully so) if they can count on the US Military to back them up or to fire on US citizens (and they CAN'T); lastly, they DO NOT HAVE the U.N. troops to do it, either. If they use U.N. troops (if they could — since those troops don't train well together, don't speak the same language, use the same signals or equipment, and overall, work together like the Keystone Cops), then they will most CERTAINLY LOSE the support of the majority of the U.S. military the first time a foreign troops kills a U.S. citizen on U.S. soil. In other words, they are SCREWED, either way they go, whether they call up our military or UN military, to put down the militia.

Were they scurrying? Did you notice that OJ Simpson's hot-media-propaganda-distraction-trial date was actually moved UP to, get this, SEPT. 19 (no, the court did NOT miscalculate the original date of SEPT. 20) or that Sen. Dole said he was going to have an important public announcement in response to Clinton's proposals on SEPT. 18 — A SUNDAY — when did Congress ever do ANYTHING on

Would it have worked as well if someone, particularly a woman, had not been willing to play the role of "dumb broad," proposing an "outrageous" idea, to be publicly ridiculed?

Sunday? Coincidence? A military unit was called in from Europe and guard units were put on extended duty — they didn't even have active duty units to RECALL, period. Is all this a clear enough picture?

But thanks to the fed propaganda machine, the KNEE-JERK reaction I received to my call, initially at least was, "You'll all be annihilated. You're trying to get patriots killed!" Everyone immediately ASSUMED that the feds were "the great all-powerful Oz." Few people BOTHERED to even do BASIC INTELLIGENCE., i.e., just how many troops COULD they call up, anyway?

Once that thought process was started, the answers were obvious. Gee, wow, golly — we outnumber the SOB's 100 to 1, easily. With only 1% of the population, we outnumber them 5-1. Again, those claiming "you'll be annihilated" were revealed to either be total asses, traitors, or nothing but pay-patriots sucking down people's money.

No, we wouldn't "all be annihilated" — far from it. But we WOULD take unnecessarily large numbers of casualties if there were a large assembly. There's no reason to do that, when we can accomplish the same goals, while limiting our own casualties, with a widespread, national militia action.

So, scoff if you like (I'm plenty used to it!) — it's been a 100% success, period.

Secondly, there are two warring factions in the bid for global domination (or at least, U.S. domination). The first of the two warring factions are what could be called a rogue faction of CIA working with rogue factions of military special operations groups and private corporations comprised of past/present CIA and very wealthy people.

The other warring faction is what most of us think of as "the international banker" group (also called "The CFR/TRILATS/ONE-WORLDEERS," etc.) Both want global domination. For now, they work towards many of the same interim goals, though not necessarily because they want to, but merely because they have what could be called a "convergence of political viewpoints" on some issues.

One goal that they have in common is to disarm America. For the time being, both are working towards this goal, but for different reasons. The CIA group wants the money and power to be had when the biggest black market in the history of the world is created by banning guns in the U.S. They are nothing but organized crime, who will capitalize on the black market. They have done this in every country where we have gone to "war" or "conflict" or "peacekeeping." In many cases, they have CAUSED these wars, precisely to profit from running guns and bomb supplies/pharmaceuticals to the warring countries and/or to get one of their chosen leaders in place in a country, in preparation for global domination.

The CFR group must disarm the people to prevent successful rebellion. Both groups want to terrorize the people into submission, which is accomplished through media disinformation, convincing us all that "it is useless to fight the government machine." The CIA and military have perfected mind control and mass propaganda techniques, which they teach to the leaders of government (i.e., NLP programming, "Non-lethal weapons." etc.), thereby utilizing their own opposition to their advantage.

Tactically, I figured one group or the other would back us up in our bid to put down the one-worlders. I was right. We have been approached numerous times in efforts to sell us unbelievable weaponry; whether these were attempted "set ups" or legitimate, I don't know. We have been approached with numerous schemes that were obvious attempts to set me up very similar to the way the guys were set up on the world trade center bombing, so that "middle east terrorists" could be blamed as their connection — all set up by the CIA, I might add. These efforts to set me up failed, but in the process, were great for telling me exactly who is running the show.

We have established excellent intelligence networks. Our sources have indicated that the CIA and a rogue faction of military and God-knows-who-else, plan to attack Washington, D.C., perhaps using nukes or Hawk missiles (we have confirmed reports of both in the possession of the CIA in this country). Originally, they planned to blame it on N. Korea, but now, instead, plan to blame it on "the militia."

Clearly, this would go the same way as the guys who were convicted of bombing the world trade center or the Waco assault — the media would do their part as the lame, idiot sheep that they are, regurgitating whatever tripe they were fed "by official government sources" and would convince the world that "the militia" nuked D.C.

The Congress is only one part of not one, but two, well-oiled machines that are dominating this country, indeed, the world. Most people who have heard of the march at all, had to first inform themselves of what is going on (or else tune out entirely).

Once learning what is going on, you should have come to the obvious answer that arresting Congress would provide, at best, a minor part of the solution to the problem.

The bottom line: We now have very well-organized militia units throughout the U.S., ready, willing, and able, to do what needs to be done, who KNOW what is going on and WHY we must fight, and not only must fight, but be ABLE to fight. New units, literally, are forming daily. We can't keep up with the demand for information, the demand has been so great.

Many took the "she's a woman, what does SHE know" approach — more power to 'em! — and in the process of "outsmarting" me, developed excellent alternatives.

One would hope that YOUR militia unit was one of the hundreds of units that figured this out and has developed their own alternative Plan and targets. But these units DO NOT need to be EN MASSE, ANYWHERE, to do what needs to be done, nor organized under ANYONE's "main umbrella." The infiltrators WILL be in your units, like it or not. Deal with that reality and recognize the limitations it imposes. There are FAR BETTER times and methods than a combined march on Washington, D.C. to do what is painfully, obviously, the only solution. Many of us, indeed at times it seems the entire nation, have succumbed to a nearly numb state of mind and an inability to think on our own. We seem to beg for someone else to provide our answers, instead of seeking them ourselves, someone to hold our hand, tell us what to eat, drink, think. We have come to accept that there "must be a law" or "a rule" for everything, like blind sheep, not realizing that for every "law" or "rule," there is someone to impose it and someone to enforce it, and we will be the targets of those impositions. We've nearly lost our faith in the decency and rationality of our fellow man, and the media and power mongers have done their best to reinforce the notion that our society is riddled with criminals, murderers, whoremongers and thieves.

But that faith isn't gone, nor is the basic decency, heart or spirit of our people. It just needed to be awakened. All I have done is provide a catalyst to reach that spirit and the love of liberty that lies inside most of us, having faith that Americans are still the hardy, liberty-breathing people who, once the evil was exposed, would refuse to knuckle under and would fight these dogs to our last breath. I have not been disappointed.

If you have come this far, and understand enough to know why we must do what must be done, it should be plain by now that this is not a game — it is deadly serious.

We are at war. right now, make no mistake about it.

God bless us all.

Death to the New World Order. •

The Pennsylvania group Brotherly Lovers, founded in the City of Brotherly Love last March, has received hundreds of signatures from dozens of states petitioning "an immediate governmental investigation at the highest level" into "the possible artificial origin of the AIDS virus" (quoting Washington State Supreme Court Justice William Goodloe, cited below). Signatures from PWA (People With AIDS) families in all fifty states are required to bypass governmental Sovereign Immunity and thereby ensure that the case be heard in Federal Court.

Class Action Lawsuit Seeks Truth about Aids

by Eric Taylor

Among the evidence: one week after the New York City Stonewall Riot, which spearheaded the Gay Rights Movement, Pentagon spokesman, Dr. Donald MacArthur, testified before Congress July 1, 1969 (HB 15090):

"The dramatic progress being made in the field of molecular biology led us to investigate the relevance of this field of science to biological warfare. A small group of experts considered this matter and provided the following observation: 1. All biological agents up to the present time are representative of naturally occurring disease, and are thus known by scientists throughout the world. They are easily available to qualified scientists for research, either for offensive or defensive purposes. 2. Within the next five to ten years, it would probably be possible to make a new ... microorganism which could differ in certain important aspects from any known disease-causing organism. Most important of these is that it might be refractory to the immunological and therapeutic processes upon which we depend to maintain our relative freedom from infectious disease. 3. A research program to explore the feasibility of this could be completed in approximately five years at a total cost of $10 million." (Department of Defense Appropriations for 1970, House of Representatives Subcommittee, Page 129.)

AIDS appeared ten years later, right on schedule. Further compelling evidence appears in the 1972 Bulletin of the United National World Health Organization in an article entitled "Virus-associated Immunopathology: Animal Models and Implications for Human Disease." It states: "An attempt should be made to ascertain whether viruses can, in fact, exert selective effects on immune function, e.g. by ... affecting T-cell function as opposed to B-cell function. The possibility should also be looked into that the immune response to the virus itself may be impaired if the infecting virus damages more or less selectively the cells responding to the viral antigens."

Both proposals are exact definitions of AIDS.

The development of such an immunosuppressive virus is described in Progressive Medical Virology, "Immunodepression by Oncogenic Viruses," 14:1-35, 1972; Nature, "Common Genetic Alterations of RNA Tumor Viruses Grown in Human Cells," 230:445-447, 1972; Texas Medicine, "Cross-species Transmission of Mammalian RNA Tumor Viruses," 69:65-75, 1973; and The Journal of Experimental Medicine, "Immunosuppressive Activity of a Subline of Mouse EL-4 Lymphoma," 143:187-205, 1976, et al.

Robert Strecker, M.D., Ph.D., and Ted Strecker, Esq., have compiled a list of 50 other articles from respected scientific journals that led them to conclude that AIDS was predicted, requested, produced and released by the U.S. Government via smallpox vaccinations in Africa and hepatitis B vaccinations in America under the supervision of Dr. Wolf Szmuness. [See PARANOIA Issue 2] The list, "AIDS References," can be obtained by contacting The Strecker Group, 1501 Colorado Blvd., Eagle Rock, CA 90041, (800) 622-8828. Their video, "The Strecker Memorandum," condenses this information into a 90-minute tour de force which demonstrates that HIV is a genetic recombinant of Bovine leukemia and sheep Visna virus cultured in human tissue and named Bovine visna in many scientific papers.

Dr. Alan Cantwell Jr., M.D., has published two well-documented books, AIDS and the Doctors of Death, 1986 (ISBN 0-917211-25-1) and Queer Blood, 1993 (ISBN 0917211-26-X), outlining man-made origin of AIDS. They are available in bookstores, or by calling (800) 356-9315. Dr. Cantwell, a recently retired dermatologist specializing in cancers such as Kaposi's Sarcoma and published in over 30 leading medical journals, initially dismissed the concept of AIDS biowarfare as absurd, until he became one of the few to actually investigate the voluminous evidence compiled by the Strecker brothers. His book was banned by World Health Organization officials at the 1989 AIDS International Conference in Canada. (Were they uncertain that the "experts" were capable of coming to their own conclusions?) However, AIDS specialist and best-selling author, Elisabeth Kubler-Ross, M.D., endorses his books.

Strecker's and Cantwell's presentation of the thousands of authoritative sources and precedents likewise convinced Dr. William Campbell Douglas, M.D.—National Health Federation's 1985 Doctor of the Year—to publish his book, AIDS: The End of Civilization (1989) detailing the development of HIV by Soviet doctors working at the Fort Detrick biowar lab in Maryland and the New York City Blood Center during the 1970s.

Other prominent experts outspoken on bio-engineered HIV are: John Seale, M.D., who published "Origins of the AIDS Viruses, HIV-1 and HIV-2: Fact or Fiction?" in The British Journal of the Royal Society of Medicine (81:617-619, 1988), which caused an international uproar censored in the American press; Professors Jacob and Lilli Segal, whose research paper, "AIDS: USA-Home Made Evil Not Imported from Africa" (Germany 1986) further supports the conclusion of Strecker, Cantwell, Campbell, and Seale.

Dr. Jack Felder "worked in the very laboratory at Fort Detrick where the HIV-virus experiment is supposed to have taken place. Dr. Felder later resigned his post and started a crusade to expose what has become known as "the American connection" to the virus. Dr. Felder says the laboratory at Fort Detrick is a "P-4 maximum security one built in October 1977 in Building 550." (New African, December 1993)

William Cooper resigned from the CIA after 30 years service upon gaining access to documents verifying that AIDS was created by the Pentagon as population control. Cooper's book, Behold a Pale Horse, is available at bookstores, or from The William Cooper Foundation, Suite 301, 19744 Beach Blvd., Huntington Beach, CA 92648.

Lieutenant Colonel Thomas E. Bearden (U.S. Army, retired) published the book, AIDS Biological Warfare, 1988 (ISBN 0-914119-04-4). He maintains that HIV was developed in American labs by Soviet scientists. Bearden holds a Master of Science degree in nuclear engineering and a Bachelor of Science degree in mathematics.

At an AIDS symposium held on April 10, 1983, State Representative Theodore Weiss (D-N.Y.) said, "As far-fetched as it may seem, given the attitudes towards homosexuals and homosexuality by some segments of society, the possible utilization of biological weapons must be seriously explored." (New York Native, Issue 62)

Illinois State Representative Douglas Huff was very vocal in supporting "The Strecker Memorandum," giving many press interviews before he was found dead on September 22, 1988 of an apparent suicide. Suspiciously, Ted Strecker was also found dead on August 11, 1988 of an apparent suicide. Neither attorneys were suicidal according to family and friends.

The Report of the President's Chemical Warfare Commission admitted, "The rapid advances of genetic technology—in which the US for now is fortunately the leader—offer the predictable likelihood of new agents being developed for which no vaccines or counteragents are known or available." (Govt. Printing Office, 1985) A 1975 U.S. Military Manual proposes "ethnic chemical weapons which would be designed to exploit naturally occurring differences in vulnerability among specific population groups." (Covert Action, Summer 1987) In 1976, Erwin Chargaff, Professor Emeritus of Columbia University and a recipient of the National Medal of Science for his work with DNA, warned, "I should say that the spreading of experimental cancer may be confidently expected." (New York Times Magazine, 8/22/76)

In 1987, a lawsuit by the Foundation for Economic Trends forced the Department of Defense (DoD) to divulge the operation of 127 chemical and biological warfare research sites in the U.S., including universities and corporations. Science magazine reported that the suit revealed "DoD is applying recombinant DNA techniques in research and the production of a range of pathogens and toxins including botulism, anthrax and yellow fever." (2/27/87) The New York Times reported that "Fort Detrick was the Army's biological warfare development center until 1969 and is now the site of some AIDS-related research. (4/8/87) It is very odd that the Pentagon's biowarfare lab would be converted into an AIDS research lab. A comment by a Fort Detrick official published in the Philadelphia Daily News implies that the lab is involved in much more than researching the cause and treatment of AIDS. Col. David L. Huxsoll, told a meeting of scientists, "Studies at the Army laboratories have shown that the AIDS virus would be an extremely poor biological warfare agent." (2/18/87)

Ge, it sure seems to be a very good one, if the enemy happens to be Gay or Black or Asian! The National Research Council recently concluded, "HIV infection and AIDS will remain limited to specific geographic areas and risk groups identified at the beginning of the epidemic: gay men and more particularly an ever-growing population of urban, drug-addicted, poverty-ridden, malnourished, hopeless and medically deprived people." (The Wall Street Journal, 3/17/93) Journalist Robert Lederer published a powerful piece in Covert Action, Summer 1987, presenting a long history of acknowledged biowarfare programs upon populations as well as vast evidence of AIDS biowarfare, noting, "Given the historic oppression of Third World and gay people, and the vicious western response to the current medical crisis, many people suspect AIDS is too convenient to be coincidental."

The Black community is a lot more informed than the Gay community, which tends to remain silent on AIDS biowar. Tony Brown's Journal, the longest-running Black public affairs show aired weekly on PBS, devoted one month to "The First AIDS Whistle-Blower" about Strecker (#1214); "What Causes AIDS" with Cantwell and Duesberg (#1215); "Is AIDS A Biological Experiment?" with Dr. Leonard Cole and a panel of experts debating ethnocide (#1217); "Is AIDS Man-made?" with Dr. Rudolph Jackson (#1132). To order the videos, call (800) 524-3552, or (212) 575-0876.

So convinced is Bill Cosby that he risked his reputation on CNN, Thanksgiving, 1991, by stating that AIDS was man-made. Spike Lee has made identical charges in the media. Top Ten actor Stephen Seagal has been turned down by all studios to make a film on AIDS biowarfare. Paramount Pictures bought the rights to Strecker's story long ago, [though no film has emerged.] Christian Anders wrote, directed, and performs in the play "The Man W.H.O. Created AIDS," which runs every Sunday night at the Wild Side Theater in North Hollywood. It is also available on video and can be purchased by calling (800) 359-3177.

Newspaper articles on AIDS biowarfare have appeared in the New Delhi Patriot (7/4/84), the Soviet Literaturnya Gazeta (10/30/85), the London Sunday Express (10/26/86), and The New York Native (4/13/87). An anonymous source claiming to have worked for the Fort Detrick Biological Warfare Lab in Bethesda, Maryland, told the Native that the AIDS biowar program was called "Operation Firm Hand."

Dan Rather reported the mounting AIDS biowarfare accusations on the CBS Evening News, 3/30/87, incurring the wrath of the Reagan Administration, which simplistically labeled it "Soviet propaganda." Ironically, Drs. Strecker, Cantwell and Campbell are often dismissed as "right wing fanatics." The facts are clearly nonpartisan, though they are agreed upon by conservatives and liberals alike: AIDS is man-made.

Upon examining evidence compiled by award-winning journalist Peter MacKenzie in the Clear Lake (CA) Independent, 6/22/93 to 7/20/93, Washington State Supreme Court Justice William Goodloe (retired) wrote: "I have heard and seen reports of the possible artificial origin of the AIDS virus, but until this report have not seen such compelling evidence of its truth. Mr. MacKenzie has assembled a remarkable documentation of heretofore unpublished data, and an immediate governmental investigation at the highest level should be commenced."

Regrettably, without even examining the extensive documentation, this issue is unthinkable to most people. Yet, the U.S. Army has a notorious history of germ warfare. The first known case of germ warfare occurred in 1763, when colonists intentionally gave smallpox-infected blankets to Native Americans, a holocaust repeated by the U.S. Army during the Trail of Tears (Covert Action, ibid). Furthermore, the recent deadly "Navajo Flu" turns out to be the Hanta virus, which Science magazine, 6/11/93, reported had long been under study by the Pentagon for biological warfare purposes.

Exactly where are all these bizarre new post-70s drug-resistant strains coming from? Legionnaires? Lymes? Herpes? TB? Flesh-eating Strep? Sabia arenavirus escapes? A very important book, A Higher Form of Killing, by Robert Harris and Jeremy Paxman, 1982, documents hundreds of incidents in which the U.S. Army experimented upon soldiers and civilians with chemicals and viruses—sometimes upon entire cities, like San Francisco. Reagan weakened Carter's Freedom of Information Act in 1984 as a result of such books, like Clouds of Secrecy by Rutgers Professor Leonard Kohl, and The Killing Winds by Gene McDermott, often cited by Strecker.

The May 6, 1994, edition of the CBS Evening News reported that the AIDS-like "Gulf War Syndrome," incapacitating thousands of Gulf War vets and their families, was determined not to be the result of Iraqi biowarfare, as claimed by the Pentagon, but, rather, the result of experimental vaccinations given to the troops before the war. (HIV-1 is likewise linked to experimental hepatitis B vaccinations first given to 1,083 healthy Gay men from New York City in November of 1978. The first diagnosed case of HIV-1 infection appeared in New York City in January 1979, and since then most of the recipients have died of AIDS.)

Recent headlines report that Congressional hearings are currently underway to recompense thousands of minority victims of radiation experiments conducted by the U.S. Military during the 1950s and '60s. Yet another gruesome example is the Tuskegee Syphilis Experiment, wherein 400 Black sharecroppers were denied treatment for syphilis from 1932 to 1972 so that the U.S. Government could study the long-term effects of the disease. Having been withheld the penicillin cure, they died agonizing deaths, and their syphilis-infected widows were compensated by the government. (Bad Blood, James Jones, 1981, Free Press, NY)

With all of these admitted precedents, why is the thought of AIDS biowarfare so unthinkable to most people? Perhaps it is because people don't do much thinking anymore, relying on headlines, sound bites and docudramas as their only source of information. The fact that TV Guide, Parade magazine, People, and The National Enquirer are the best-selling publications in America speaks for itself. Americans care about O.J., not genocide.

Dr. Joseph Sonnabend, M.D.—one of the first and foremost AIDS experts—complains that "part of the problem today is that science writers are a pretty limp lot. They don't do any investigating. They just sit there and receive their press kits ... They are so gullible, these science writers now—lazy and gullible." (Interview, December 1992)

What is worse than gullibility and laziness is silence. Even the Gay community, for the most part, ignores this issue. Few Gay papers have the guts to cover it. Apparently red ribbons, quilts, parades, and benefits reassure us that something is being done. Now that AZT proves to be as deadly as HIV, after being prescribed even to asymptomatic patients for a decade, one would think we would begin to suspect that something stinks. AZT was banned in 1957 by the FDA because it was killing the people it was supposed to be curing! (Health Consciousness Magazine, August 1991)

AIDS patients appear to be guinea pigs for hundreds of toxic drugs, while safe treatments that are clinically proven to eliminate AIDS symptoms, such as acemannan, are completely ignored. (Medical World News, December 1987 and The Journal of Advancement in Medicine, Vol.3, No.4, Winter 1990) 50% of PWAs seroconverted HIV-negative!

Denial is a powerful psychological mechanism that must be overcome if we are ever to get to the bottom of AIDS. The truth is slowly surfacing. For instance, 60 Minutes (6/19/94) presented a very strong case that Kimberly Bergalis and five other plaintiffs who won a $10 million settlement for supposedly contracting AIDS from their dentist, Dr. David Acer, all lied about their sex lives. Kimberly, a self-proclaimed "virgin," had been diagnosed with the STD genital warts, and had previously admitted on videotape to engaging in sex with two men. The Centers for Disease Control (CDC) overlooked conflicting testimony by all six plaintiffs and used highly questionable DNA tests to generate public hysteria and homophobia in the sensationalized case. Dr. Acer was accused of first degree murder by the media.

The CDC also played a major role in the Tuskegee Syphilis Experiment and the hepatitis B vaccine trial.

Because the U.S. Government enjoys immunity from being sued by individuals, it is essential that hundreds of signed petitions from HIV-positive people, their families and friends in all 50 states be received by Brotherly Lovers in order to initiate this class action suit. Concerned parties should write a brief letter to their Congressional representatives, quoting former Washington State Supreme Court Justice William Goodloe (see above.)

people to know that she had been alive for at least two hours. The story was that she drowned, who wants to go into the details of how long it took her to drown?

And Teddy claims he can't remember how he got out of the car, he just somehow emerged?

I can't see how he got out of the car! That's why I can't see him in the car at all.

If he was so drunk he can't remember, then why didn't he drown along with Mary Jo?

Absolutely! And if he was that drunk, he couldn't have been driving fast enough for what happened. I think applying the brakes is a natural reaction, even for a drunk. He couldn't have had that much to drink, there wasn't that much booze at the party, unless he was drinking it straight.

Could he have gotten out of the passenger window somehow?

Well, then you'd have Jack Olsen's story (The Bridge at Chappaquiddick). He's the one that put Mary Jo behind the wheel. He figures they got out, waded in the poison ivy and then Teddy let her drive. Then he just floats out the passenger window. According to Olsen, she didn't know how to work the car and drove it off the bridge, got into the backseat, and drowned. Now how do you do that?

Typical "dumb broad"?

Oh yeah. There are a lot of theories out there. And so many facts to keep track of.

So, Mary Jo had been Bobby Kennedy's secretary?

Yes, Mary Jo had been very upset about Bobby's assassination. She was a very respected girl, smart, and doing exactly what she wanted to do. Everybody said she was going with some fellow who wanted to marry her, and some tried to say she was pregnant. All kinds of rumors. She lived in Washington and shared a place with one of the other girls. They were Kennedy campaign workers, the so-called "Boiler Room Girls." They worked tremendous hours. I have a lot of respect for those people. This was not the first party the Kennedys had thrown for the girls. Teddy couldn't make it to the last one they had held in D.C., so he suggested to his cousin Joe Gargan to fix up a party for them the weekend of the boat races at the Vineyard. So Joe got the cottage. There was nothing hanky panky about the party at all.

One of the most important witnesses was Huck Look.

Yes, he saw a black sedan, which appeared lost, and as he approached the car to offer directions, the car sped off. He has never changed his story one bit, and nobody has really tried to make him, except the Judge at inquest. Here's Look's story with Ted's car and occupants alive and well at 1 a.m. and here's Teddy's story, off the bridge at 11:30. Totally at odds, and nobody does anything about it!

Ted also claims he took a wrong turn on the way to the ferry and ended up at the bridge. Didn't he know his way around the island?

Certainly he did. They had been around that area since they were kids. He knew the area like the back of his hand.

So, how many people did Look claim to see in the car?

He saw two people in the front and "something" or a "shadow" in the backseat, but he wasn't sure what it was.

Maybe a slumped figure?

He didn't guess at what it was. He never said.

And the people in the car appeared lost?

Do we operate under a system of equal justice under the law, or is there one system for the average citizen and another for the high and mighty?

Sen. Edward Kennedy, speaking of the pardon of Richard Nixon

Yes, they were the ones who didn't know their way around, not Teddy Kennedy! I don't believe Ted was driving the car at that point. They attempted to drive straight down Cemetery Road, stopped, backed up and turned down Dyke Road toward the bridge. Teddy would not have done that. He knows the island very well.

So there are no street lights out there?

No, just poison ivy, six feet high. There were some who asserted that the stains on Mary Jo's blouse were grass stains. Pig's eye! I can't see any hanky panky going on in the poison ivy. The place is loaded with it.

Have you ever spoken with Huck Look?

No, I almost made it, but not quite. He didn't want to give any interviews. He knew he was in contradiction with Ted's story, and that's not a happy position to be in.

So, you believe that Mary Jo could not have been sitting in the front seat and got thrown to the back during the flip?

I don't think it's possible. With the car upside down, she would have to dive down deeper to get over the front seat and into the back. It's unnatural to do that. You wouldn't dive down deeper to save yourself. She was already in the back seat and scrambled up to where the air pocket was in the footwell. That's exactly where she was found, in rigor mortis, by John Farrar at about 9 a.m. He had someone make a drawing exactly as he had found her. It's a very important document.

Could this hit have been done by the Mob?

The CIA knows better how to engineer an accidental death, I think, than the Mafia. The Mob only knows how to take a .9

millimeter and shoot a guy in the back of the head behind the ear. That's what they are much better at. The CIA has been engineering accidents all over the world. But nobody can believe the CIA operates in Massachusetts! These things don't happen here. Maybe in Vietnam, Africa, Europe, South America, (it happens all the time down there), but not in Massachusetts!

Dear Diary,

M June - A continuence of May, except that; we draw closer and closer, and I think very little now of Ella. In the last days of this month I revele my longing to return to America. My wife is slightly startled. But than encourages me to do what I wish to do.

July - I decived to take my two week vacation and travel to Moscow (without police permission) to the American Embassy to see about getting my U.S. passport back and make arrangements for my wife to enter the U.S. with me.

July 8 - I fly by plane to Minsk on a il - 20, 2hrs 20m later after taking a tearful and anxious parting from my wife I arrive in Moscow departing by bus. From the airfield I arrive in the center of the city. Making my way through heavy traffic I don't come in sight of the embassy until 3:00 in the afternoon. Its Saturday what if they are closed? Entering I find the offices empty but mänge to contact Snyder on the phone (since all embassy personal live in the same building) he comes down to greet me shake my hand after interview he advises me to come in the first thing mon.

July 8. Interview July 9 recive passport; call Marina to Moscow also.

July 14. I and Marina returen to Minsk.

July 15. Marina at work, is shocked to find out ther everyone knows she entered the U.S. embassy.

They were called at her place of work from some officials in Moscow." The boses hold a meeting and give her a strong browbeating. The first of many indoctrinations.

July 15-Aug 20. We have found out which blanks and certifikates are necessceary to apply for a exit visa they number about 20 papers; birth certificates affidavite photos ect. On Aug 20th we give the papers out they way it will be 3 and 1/2 months before we know wheather they'll let us go or not. in the meantime Marina has had to stade 4 different meeting at the place of work held by her boss's at the direction of "someone" by phone. The young comm leauge headquthers also called about her and she had to go see them for 1 and 1/2 hrs. The purpose (expressed) is to dissuade her from going to the USA, Net Effect: Make her more stubborn about wanting to go. Marina is pregnet, we only hope that the visas come through soon.

Aug 21-Sept 1 - I make expected trips to the passport & visa office also to ministry of for. affairs in Minsk, also Min. of Interat affairs, all of which have a say in the granting of a visa. I extracked promises of quick attention to US.

Sept.-Oct 18. No word from Min. (They'll call us). Marina leaves Minsk by train on vaction to the city of Khkov in the Urals to visit an aunt for 4 weeks. During this time I am lonely by I and Erich go to the dances and public places for enitanment. I havent done this in quite a few months now. I spend my birth-day alone at the opera watching my favoriot "Queen of Spades." I am 22 years of old.

Nov 2- Marina arrives back, radiant, with several jars of preserves for me from her aunt in Khkov.

Nov-Dec. Now we are becoming anoid about the delay Marina is beginning to waiver about going to the US. Probably from the strain and her being pregrate, still we quarrel and so things are not to bright, esp. with the approach of the hard Russian winter.

Dec 25th Xmas Day Tues. Marina is called to passport & visa office. She is told we have been granted Soviet exit visa's. She fills out the completing blank and then comes home with the news. Its great (I think!) New Years, we spend at the Zeger's at a dinner party at midnight. at- tended by 6 other persons.*

I spend my birthday alone at the opera watching my favoriot Queen of Spades. I am 22 years of old.

Timewave Zero™

This amazing software illustrates Terence McKenna's theory of time and the end of history as told in his book The Archaic Revival, as revealed to him by an extraterrestrial intelligence in the aftermath of a remarkable psychedelic experiment conducted deep in the Amazon jungle in 1971. Based on the mathematical properties of I Ching Hexagrams and the Mayan calendar, it will display graphically any portion of the 4.5 billion-year history of the Earth, in increments as small as 92 minutes. The peculiarities of the wave, which contains intriguing fractal properties within its segments, reveal that certain historic periods are "in resonance" with each other, as are the periods 1945-2012 and 2293 BC-2012 .
